For the use of students no other or better edition of the Code of Civil Procedure exists than Mr Mulla's book. It is abridged from the well-known work of the learned author for practitioners. The comments are particularly useful to students. The rules framed by the different Courts of final jurisdiction in India have been given in appendices. The book has been so popular with students that they need only be reminded that a new edition of their tried favourite has appeared—The Bombay Law Reporter (January 15th, 1922).

PREFACE TO THE TENTH EDITION.

THIS edition has been thoroughly revised by the author who died on the day he was to write the preface. Sir Dinshah Mulla's works have achieved an unique position in the legal literature of India, and it was my privilege to assist him in the preparation of this and previous editions of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The present edition contains cases in the authorised and unauthorised reports upto January 1934.

I shall be carrying out the wishes of the author in stating that he felt indebted to Mr Justice Pratt for the valuable assistance rendered by him in the preparation of this edition.

The proofs have been revised by B K Desai, Esquire, M A , LL B , Advocate (O S), High Court Bombay , B P. Sethna, Esquire, Advocate (O S), High Court, Bombay , and M J C Mistree, Esquire, Advocate (O S), High Court, Bombay. The Table of cases has been prepared by B D. PREFACE TO THE THIRD EDITION.

In preparing the present edition I had the unique assistance of the services of Sir Lawrence Jenkins—the eminent and illustrious lawyer who filled the office of Chief Justice of the High Court of Bombay with great ability and distinction for well nigh ten years. The notes above referred to were prepared by Sir Lawrence Jenkins while he was on the Special Committee which met at Simla in June 1907 and modelled the Code of Civil Procedure in its present form. That the Code of 1908 is a considerable improvement upon its predecessor is beyond all question. The arrangement, though novel is scientific. It proceeds upon the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts. It consists of two parts: the first containing provisions of a substantive character and the second containing provisions which relate to “matters of mere machinery.” The 158 sections which form the body of the Code constitute the first part. The Rules and Orders comprised in Schedule I constitute the second part. The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred to a separate schedule, being Schedule II, the object being to facilitate the repeal of these provisions on the passing of a new and comprehensive Arbitration Act. Sections 321 to 325 C of the same Code which relate to execution of decrees by Collectors have been transferred to Schedule III. Schedule IV contains a list of enactments amended and Schedule V a list of enactments repealed by the new Code.

The arrangement of the present work is a simple one. Long familiarity with the section numbers of the Code of 1882 has rendered it necessary to give a comparative table of the sections of the old and the new Code. Such a table has accordingly been given, and to facilitate reference to it, which is likely to be constant, the table portion has been marked off by a piece of tape attached to the volume. At the same time we have given at the beginning of each section and rule of the new Code references to the corresponding sections of the Code of 1882 in thick black types enclosed in square brackets. There are, besides, a large number of rules comprised in the First Schedule which have been borrowed from the Rules made under the Judicature Acts. References to the latter rules also have been given in square brackets at the beginning of the corresponding rules of this Code, and are indicated by the letters ‘RSC,’ being an abbreviation of the words ‘Rules of the Supreme Court of England’—see, for instance, Order 1, rule 1, at p. 304.

THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE ACT V OF 1908

ON THE 21ST MARCH 1908

An Act to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the Procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature

WHEREAS it is expedient to consolidate and amend the laws relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature, It is hereby enacted as follows —

Preliminary.

Short title commence ment and extent

1. [S 1] (1) This Act may be cited as the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908

(2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909

(3) This section and sections 155 to 158 extend to the whole of British India the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts

Previous Procedure—The first Code of Civil Procedure was Act 8 of 1859. Before that the procedure of the Mofussil Courts was regulated by special Acts and Regulations which were repealed by Act 10 of 1861 and the procedure of the Supreme Courts was under their own rules and orders and certain Acts e.g. Act 17 of 1822 and Act 6 of 1854. The Code of 1859 applied to Mofussil Courts only. In 1862 the Supreme Courts and the Courts of Saifur Dwyani Alahit in the Presidency Towns were abolished by the High Courts Act 1861 (24 and 25 Vic. c. 104) and the powers of those Courts were vested in the Chartered High Courts. The Letters Patent of 1862 establishing the High Courts extended to them the procedure of the Code of 1859. The Charters of 1865 which empowered the High Courts to make rules and orders regulating proceedings in civil cases required them to be guided as far as possible by the provisions of the Code of 1859 and subsequent amending Acts. Such amending Acts are Act 4 of 1860 43 of 1860 23 of 1861 9 of 1863 Act of 1867 1 of 1870 14 of 1870 9 of 1871 32 of 1871 and 1 of 1872.

The next Code was Act 10 of 1877 which repealed that of 1859. This was amended by Acts 18 of 1878 and 12 of 1879 and then superseded by the Code of 1882 (Act 14 of 1882). This was amended by Acts 15 of 1882, 14 of 1885, 4 of 1886, 10 of 1886, 7 of 1887, 8 of 1887, 6 of 1888, 10 of 1888, 13 of 1889, 8 of 1890, 6 of 1892, 5 of 1894, 7 of 1895, and 13 of 1895, and then superseded by the present Code.

The chief feature of this Code is its division into two parts on the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts. The main body of the Code is in the sections, and the rules refer to matters of mere machinery which the High Courts may adopt to local conditions.

Consolidate and amend.—The preamble shews that the object of the present Act is not only to amend but also to consolidate the law of civil procedure. If the meaning is plain no regard should be paid to the previous law, and the language of the Act must be interpreted uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law. But if the meaning be doubtful, resort may be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Act (a).

1 The golden rule for the interpretation of this as well as all other Acts is to consider the plain meaning of the words used (b). The Court's function is not to say what the Legislature meant but to ascertain what the Legislature has said it meant (c), and it is always dangerous to paraphrase an Act (d).

2 Procedure is mere machinery and its object is to facilitate and not to obstruct the administration of justice (e). The Code should therefore be construed liberally, and so far as possible technical objections should not be allowed to defeat substantial justice (f). No defence should be excluded except where to do so would be to negative the provision of a rule of procedure. It is no longer a province of procedure to exclude defences (g).

3 The Code is one continuous whole, the sections being enacted simultaneously (h), and so when two procedures or two remedies are provided, one of them is not to be construed as in derogation of the other (i).

4 In matters of procedure uniformity of decision is important (j), and if a Judge finds a principle laid down by competent authority it is better to accept and apply it, even if his own mind is not satisfied than to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it (k).

5 Previous legislation may be referred to as an aid to construction, but only in case of ambiguity (l).

6 Proceedings of the Legislature in passing an Act are to be excluded from consideration in the judicial construction of the Act. These proceedings include Reports of Select Committees, Statements of Objects and Reasons attached to Bills, and debates of the Legislature Before this rule had been settled by the Privy Council in Administrator General v Premlal (m), the cases were not consistent (n) and even later the Madras High Court referred to the report of a Select Committee in Assan v Pathumma (o)

7 Marginal notes to the sections of an Act are not to be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act (p)

8 Illustrations in Acts of the Legislature, although not part of the sections, are helpful in the working and application of the Acts, and it is the duty of a Court of law to accept them, if that can be done, as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text The illustrations should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which the sections deal And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption (q) But an illustration cannot be allowed to control the plain meaning of a section (r)

9 The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction (s) In cases however, where there is no specific provision in the Code, the Court has the power, and, it would seem, it is its duty, to act according to justice, equity and good conscience (t) See s 151

10 Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law must be presumed to be intended not to have a retrospective operation But this presumption does not apply to enactments affecting procedure or practice such as the Code of Civil Procedure The reason is that no person has a vested right in any course of procedure The general principle indeed seems to be that alterations in the procedure are always retrospective unless there be some good reason against it (u) But an appellate Court cannot reverse an order made under an old Code on the ground that the new Code has enacted a different rule (v) The right of appeal however is in the nature of a vested right and hence the provision in s 154 of the Code declaring that nothing in this Code shall affect any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement

11 The Code consists (1) of that which is termed the body of the Code and (ii) of the rules The body of the Code is fundamental and is unalterable except by the

The next Code was Act 10 of 1877 which repealed that of 1859. This was amended by Acts 18 of 1878 and 12 of 1879 and then superseded by the Code of 1882 (Act 14 of 1882). This was amended by Acts 15 of 1882, 14 of 1883, 4 of 1886, 10 of 1886, 7 of 1887, 8 of 1887, 6 of 1888, 10 of 1888, 13 of 1889, 8 of 1890, 6 of 1892, 5 of 1894, 7 of 1895 and 13 of 1895, and then superseded by the present Code.

The chief feature of this Code is its division into two parts on the lines of the Judicature Acts and the Rules framed under those Acts. The main body of the Code is in the sections and the rules refer to matters of mere machinery which the High Courts may adopt to local conditions.

Consolidate and amend—The preamble shews that the object of the present Act is not only to amend but also to consolidate the law of civil procedure. If the meaning is plain no regard should be paid to the previous law, and the language of the Act must be interpreted uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law. But if the meaning be doubtful, resort may be had to the previous state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the provisions of the Act (a).

1 The golden rule for the interpretation of this as well as all other Acts is to consider the plain meaning of the words used (b). The Court's function is not to say what the Legislature meant but to ascertain what the Legislature has said it meant (c), and it is always dangerous to paraphrase an Act (d).

2 Procedure is mere machinery and its object is to facilitate and not to obstruct the administration of justice (e). The Code should therefore be construed liberally, and so far as possible technical objections should not be allowed to defeat substantial justice (f). No defence should be excluded except where to do so would be to negative the provision of a rule of procedure. It is no longer a province of procedure to exclude defences (g).

3 The Code is one continuous whole the sections being enacted simultaneously (h) and so when two procedures or two remedies are provided, one of them is not to be construed as in derogation of the other (i).

4 In matters of procedure uniformity of decision is important (j), and if a Judge finds a principle laid down by competent authority it is better to accept and apply it, even if his own mind is not satisfied than to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it (k).

5 Previous legislation may be referred to as an aid to construction, but only in case of ambiguity (l).

6 Proceedings of the Legislature in passing an Act are to be excluded from consideration in the judicial construction of the Act. These proceedings include Reports of Select Committees, Statements of Objects and Reasons attached to Bills, and debates of the Legislature Before this rule had been settled by the Privy Council in Administrator General v. Premial (m), the cases were not consistent (n), and even later the Madras High Court referred to the report of a Select Committee in Assan v. Pathumma (o)

7 Marginal notes to the sections of an Act are not to be referred to for the purpose of construing an Act (p)

8 Illustrations in Acts of the Legislature, although not part of the sections, are helpful in the working and application of the Acts, and it is the duty of a Court of law to accept them, if that can be done, as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text The illustrations should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which the sections deal And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption (q) But an illustration cannot be allowed to control the plain meaning of a section (r)

9. The essence of a Code is to be exhaustive on the matters in respect of which it declares the law, and it is not the province of a judge to disregard or go outside the letter of the enactment according to its true construction (s) In cases, however, where there is no specific provision in the Code, the Court has the power, and, it would seem, it is its duty, to act according to justice, equity and good conscience (t) See s 151

10 Every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights acquired under existing law must be presumed to be intended not to have a retrospective operation But this presumption does not apply to enactments affecting procedure or practice, such as the Code of Civil Procedure The reason is that no person has a vested right in any course of procedure The general principle, indeed, seems to be that alterations in the procedure are always retrospective, unless there be some good reason against it (u) But an appellate Court cannot reverse an order made under an old Code on the ground that the new Code has enacted a different rule (v) The right of appeal, however, is in the nature of a vested right, and hence the provision in s 154 of the Code declaring that nothing in this Code shall affect "any present right of appeal which shall have accrued to any party at its commencement"

11 "The Code consists (i) of that which is termed 'the body of the Code' and (ii) of the rules The body of the Code is fundamental and is unalterable except by the Legislature, the rules are concerned with details and machinery and can be more readily altered. Thus it will be found that the body of the Code creates jurisdiction while the rules indicate the mode in which it is to be exercised. It follows that the body of the Code is expressed in more general terms, and it has to be read in conjunction with the more particular provisions of the rules" (c)

Courts of Civil Judicature—These are Civil Courts in British India. Insolvency procedure is civil procedure, but the procedure of Insolvency Courts both in the Mofussil and in Presidency Towns is regulated by special Acts though in certain matters the procedure of the Code is applied so far as it may be applicable (x). The Code applies to proceedings on the Admiralty side of the High Court (y). It also applies to proceedings in the testamentary and intestate jurisdiction of the High Courts and Mofussil Courts except as otherwise provided by the Indian Succession Act, 1925 (z), and to matrimonial suits subject to the provisions of the Indian Divorce Act. As to Small Cause Courts there is special provision in sections 7 and 8. Revenue Courts are Civil Courts and it has been held that they are governed by the Code except in matters where a special procedure is enacted by the local Act (a). Special provision is made in sec. 5 for such Courts in order to preserve the summary character of rent litigation under local laws. But the Code does not apply to Mamlatdars Courts (b).

British India—The expression "British India" is not defined in the Code. In the absence of any definition of a particular expression in an Act, we are to turn to the definition of it in the General Clauses Act X of 1897. There are several terms of frequent or general occurrence in several Acts, and these are defined in the General Clauses Act. "British India" is one of them, and it is defined in that Act (s. 3, cl. 7) as meaning "all territories and places within His Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by His Majesty through the Governor General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor General of India". The words British India therefore exclude the territories of Native States (c) such as the Kathiawar States (d). Territories ceded by Native States not in full sovereignty but for limited purposes such as the establishment of a civil station (e) or for railway administration (f) are not part of British India. Aden (g) and British Burma (h) are within British India but not Singapore (i). Acts 14 and 15 of 1874 declare not only Aden but also the Laccadive, Andaman, and Nicobar Islands and Ajmere and Merwara in Rajputana to be parts of British India. The phrase "the whole of British India" includes the Scheduled Districts (j).

Scheduled Districts—A list of Scheduled Districts is given in Schedule I to the Scheduled Districts Act XIV of 1874. The sections of this Code, except s. 1 and ss. 155 to 158, do not extend to any of the Scheduled Districts. Section 5, however, of the Scheduled Districts Act empowers the Local Government, with the sanction of the Governor General in Council, to extend to any of the Scheduled Districts any

2. [S 2] In this Act, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context,—

Definitions

(1) “ Code ” includes rules

See notes on p 3 para No (11)

(2) “ decree ” means the formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as regards the Court expressing it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and may be either preliminary or final It shall be deemed to include the rejection of a plaint and the determination of any question within section 47 or section 144, but shall not include—

(a) any adjudication from which an appeal lies as an appeal from an order, or

(b) any order of dismissal for default

Explanation —A decree is preliminary when further proceedings have to be taken before the suit can be completely disposed of It is final when such adjudication completely disposes of the suit It may be partly preliminary and partly final

(3) “ decree holder ” means any person in whose favour a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made

Definition of decree In the Code of Civil Procedure 1882 —The term decree was defined in the Code of 1882 as follows —

Decree means the formal expression of an adjudication upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court when such adjudication so far as regards the Court expressing it decides the suit or appeal An order rejecting a plaint or directing accounts to be taken or determining any question mentioned or referred to in section 244 [now s 47] but not specified in section 588 [now s 104 and O 43 r 1] is within this definition an order specified in section 588 is not within this definition

Importance of the definition of decree—The adjudications of a Court of law may be divided into two classes namely (1) decrees and (2) orders Orders again may be sub-divided into appealable orders and non-appealable orders The expression order is defined in cl (14) of the present section as meaning the formal expression of any decision of a Civil Court which is not a decree

Where a suit on amounts to a decree it is invariably appealable unless it is expressly provided that no appeal shall lie from it (a, 96) Further where an appeal is

S. 2 preferred from a decision which amounts to a decree and a decree is passed in a further appeal will lie to the High Court from the decree passed in appeal if it comes within the provisions of s. 100 below. This is called a second appeal. In a case therefore of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits appeal and in some cases also a second appeal.

Where an adjudication amounts to an order, no appeal lies from it unless enumerated in the list of appealable orders given in s. 104 or in the list g. O. 43 r. 1.

We have thus seen that an appeal lies from a decree. We have also seen that an appeal lies from an order specified in s. 104 or in O. 43, r. 1. What then is the distinction between a decree and an appealable order? The distinction is this—that in the case of an adjudication which amounts to a decree the law permits a second appeal in some cases; no second appeal is allowed at all in the case of an adjudication amounts to an appealable order. That is to say, if an appeal is preferred from a decree and a decree is passed in appeal an appeal will in certain cases lie from the decree in appeal. But if an appeal is preferred from an appealable order and an order is passed in appeal no appeal lies at all from the order passed in appeal (s. 104 sub-section 2). To take an instance—An appeal from a decision of a Subordinate Judge to a District Judge. The appellate Court decides against the appellant. He prefers a second appeal to the High Court from the decision of the District Court. If the decision of the Subordinate Judge amounts to a decree a second appeal will lie provided the case comes within s. 100. If the decision amounts to an appealable order no second appeal will lie.

The definition of decree is important not only for determining the right of appeal but for determining whether an appeal lies at all in the first instance. If an adjudication is an appealable order, there is no difficulty whatever in determining whether an appeal lies from it. All that has to be done in such a case is to refer to s. 104 or O. 43 r. 1 and to ascertain whether the order is enumerated in the list there given. No real difficulty in determining the right of appeal arises when the adjudication from which an appeal is preferred is not an appealable order. In such a case the adjudication may be either a decree or a non appealable order and an appeal can lie only if the adjudication amounts to a decree. It matters not that the judgment is headed an order, for if in fact it fulfils the conditions of the definition under s. 2 (2) it is a decree and an appeal lies from it. The appellant would in this class of cases endeavour to show that the adjudication appealed from is a decree, while the respondent would endeavour to show that the adjudication is merely an order. Instances of this class of cases are given in the next following paragraph.

Essential elements of a decree—The term 'decree' is defined in the Code as meaning "the formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the rights expressed in it, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit." The words italicized above indicate the distinguishing marks of a decree. To constitute a decision a decree, the following conditions must be present—

I—The decision must have been expressed in a suit.

II—The decision must have been expressed on the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit.

I In a suit—Every suit is commenced by a plaint (o) and when there is no civil suit there is no decree (p) Some proceedings commenced by an application are statutory suits so that the decision is a decree, e.g., a contentious probate proceeding (q) or an application to file an agreement to refer to arbitration (r) The following are instances of orders which are not decrees, not having been made in a suit —An order rejecting an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, for no suit has till then been filed (s) an order refusing leave to institute a suit for accounts of a Religious Endowment (t), an order on a petition to appoint a new member on the committee of a Religious Endowment (u) an order under the Indian Trusts Act dismissing an application for the removal of a trustee (v), an order on a settlement case under sec 104 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act 3 of 1893 as the proceeding is instituted not by a plaint but by an application (w)

II Rights of parties as to matters in controversy—There must have been an adjudication on the rights of the parties (x) An order of dismissal for default of appearance is no determination of the rights of the parties and therefore is not a decree (y) So also an order under O 9, r 2, dismissing a suit when summons is not served in consequence of plaintiff's failure to pay Court fee (z) Special provision is made in the definition of a decree for orders of dismissal for default, apparently because the previous cases were not consistent An order rejecting an appeal under O 41, r 10, for failure to furnish security is not a decree as it does not determine the rights of the parties in controversy in the appeal (a) An order granting leave to withdraw a suit with leave to file a fresh suit is not a decree, for the rights of the parties are left open for determination in the subsequent suit (b), but an order granting leave to withdraw an appeal and dismissing the appeal is a decree, for the appeal is brought before the Court and finally disposed of (b1) The right in controversy must be a substantive right and not merely a processual right for a finding on a processual right is only to enable the Court to inquire into the rights in controversy in the suit (c) Thus an order that a plaint should be stamped with a higher Court fee is not a decree (d)

III Conclusively determines—This expression implies that the decision must be one which is complete and final as regards the Court which passed it The decree may conclusively determine the rights of the parties although it does not completely dispose of the suit See note on p 9, Preliminary Decree

IV Formal expression—All requirements of form must be complied with Thus if no decree has been drawn up, no appeal will lie from the judgment (e)

Finding on issue—It was at one time held by the High Court of Bombay that a finding on a preliminary issue that a suit was not bad for misjoinder or that it was not barred by limitation or that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit was in the nature of a preliminary decree and appealable as such (f). These decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court and it has been held that a finding on an issue cannot be the subject of an appeal until it has been embodied in the judgment and decree. It was accordingly held in that case that a finding that the questions in dispute were not estate questions and were not therefore outside the jurisdiction of Civil Courts did not amount to a preliminary decree and that no appeal lay from such finding (g). It has similarly been held that a finding that the matter is not res judicata and that the trial can proceed is not a preliminary decree (h).

Again no appeal lies from a finding that an execution application is not barred by limitation and that the execution proceedings are to go on till final determination (i).

Points of distinction between the definition of "decree" in this Code and that in the Code of 1882—The definition of decree as it stood in the Code of 1882 has been modified in the following two respects—

1 Under the Code of 1882 no adjudication came within the definition of a decree unless it decided the suit. Under this Code an adjudication which conclusively (j) determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit is a decree though it does not completely dispose of the suit. But the decree in that case is called a preliminary decree as distinguished from a final decree. The present definition is wider than that in the Code of 1882 in that it includes preliminary decrees within its scope the object being to permit an appeal from preliminary decrees. See notes below Preliminary decree.

2 Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether an order of dismissal for default was a decree. The present section expressly declares that an order of dismissal for default is not within the definition of decree the object being to exclude the right of appeal from such order. See note below Order of dismissal for default.

Two other alterations both of a minor character may also be noted here. They are as follows—

(i) An adjudication directing accounts to be taken is no longer to be deemed to be a decree as under the Code of 1882 it is a decree by the very terms of the present definition though a preliminary one. Under the Code of 1882 such an adjudication was appealable for it was to be deemed to be a decree. Under this Code it is appealable for it is a decree. This distinction however is of no practical importance. See notes to s. 97 below.

(ii) The word within has been substituted for mentioned or referred to in with a view to bring within the definition of decree orders against sureties (s. 145) and orders as to Court fees in pauper suits (O. 33 r. 13) and thus providing for appeals therefrom. See notes to s. 145 and O. 33 r. 13.

The definition of decree is important because it determines the right of appeal. Hence every material change made in the definition of that term must be taken to have been made for the purpose either of permitting an appeal from adjudications which were not appealable before or excluding a right of appeal from adjudications from which an appeal was permitted under the old law. It is from this standpoint therefore that the new definition has been examined.

Preliminary decree—The definition of a preliminary decree was characterized by Rankin, C J, as a lame definition for if it were taken literally one might well ask how any decree could be partly preliminary and partly final. In mortgage and partition suits and in suits for partnership and other accounts the preliminary decree is what in the Court of Chancery would have been described as 'the decree', while the final decree corresponds to the 'order on further consideration'. The learned Chief Justice said that sec 97 expressly exempts preliminary decrees from the position assigned to interlocutory orders and precludes an appellant from impeaching them in the course of an attack upon the final decree. The final decree is in its nature dependent and subordinate, because it is a decree which has been passed as a result of proceedings directed and controlled by the preliminary decree and based thereon. The function of the final decree is merely to restate and apply with precision what the preliminary decree has ordained. The decrees are in the same suit and if the preliminary decree is set aside the final decree is superseded (l).

It was at one time held by the High Court of Bombay that a finding on a preliminary issue that a suit is not bad for misjoinder, or that it is not barred by limitation, or a decision that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit, was a preliminary decree (l). But these decisions have since been overruled by a Full Bench of the same High Court (m). In the last mentioned case it was held that a finding that the matters in dispute are not caste questions, and are not therefore outside the jurisdiction of Civil Courts, does not amount to a preliminary decree from which an appeal can lie. Similarly it has been held that a finding that a matter is not res judicata, and that therefore the trial can proceed is not a preliminary decree (n). Nor is a finding that the plaintiff is competent to maintain a suit brought by him a preliminary decree (o), nor a finding that a suit is not barred by limitation (p), nor a finding that the defendant is not an agriculturist (q). A finding that the defendant is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Dekkan Agriculturists Relief Act, 1879 is not by itself an adjudication which can be embodied in a preliminary decree, though it may result in the plaint being returned for presentation to the proper Court (r). (See O 7, r 10.) An interlocutory order that a plaint should be stamped with a higher court fee than what it is stamped with does not amount to a preliminary decree (s). None of these findings determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit, they merely enable the Court to proceed to inquire into those rights (t).

1 A sues B for cancellation of a document and a decree is passed in the suit. This is a final decree, for the suit is completely disposed of.

2 A suit is brought by one partner against another for a dissolution of partnership and for the taking of partnership accounts. Here the Court may pass a preliminary decree declaring the proportionate shares of the parties and directing such accounts to be taken as it thinks fit, and, after the accounts are taken, it may pass a final decree directing payments of debts due by the partnership and the costs of the suit, and directing payment to the parties of the amount found due to them on the taking of accounts. See O 20, r 15.

3 A sues B for the recovery of possession of certain immovable property and for mesne profits. The Court may pass a decree for possession of the property, and direct inquiry as to mesne profits. Here the decree is partly final and partly preliminary. It is final so far as it directs delivery of possession to A. It is preliminary so far as it directs an inquiry as to mesne profits. After the inquiry is completed, the Court has to pass a final decree in respect of mesne profits in accordance with the result of the inquiry. See O 20, r 12.

The following is a list of suits in which a preliminary decree may be passed under this Code —

|---|--|
| 1 Suits for recovery of possession of immovable property and for rent or mesne profits (O 20, r 12) | 6 Suits for partition of property or separate possession of a share therein (O 20, r 18) |
| 2 Administration suits (O 20, r 13) | 7 Suits for foreclosure of a mortgage (O 34, rr 2 3) |
| 3 Suits for pre-emption (O 20, r 14) | 8 Suits for sale of mortgaged property (O 34, rr 4 5) |
| 4 Suits for dissolution of partnership (O 20 r 15) | 9 Suits for redemption of a mortgage (O 34 rr 7 8) |
| 5 Suits for account between principal and agent (O 20 r 16) | |

The above list is not exhaustive and there is nothing to preclude the Courts from passing a preliminary decree in other cases (u).

Rejection of plaint—As to an adjudication rejecting a plaint it has been expressly provided by the present clause that it shall be deemed to be a decree. Such adjudication therefore, is appealable as a decree (t). An appeal however, is not the only remedy open to a party whose plaint is rejected, for he may cure the defect for which the plaint was rejected and present a fresh plaint (O 7, r 13). As to the cases in which a plaint shall be rejected see O 7 r 11.

Order returning plaint—A plaint may be returned for amendment (O 6 r 17) or to be presented to the proper Court (O 7 r 10). In either case the decision returning the plaint is an order as distinguished from a decree. An order returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court was appealable under the Code of 1882 [s 588 cl (6)] and it is also appealable under this Code [O 43 r 1, cl (a)]. An order returning a plaint for amendment was appealable under the Code of 1882 [s 588] it is no longer appealable under this Code (w).

Rejection of memorandum of appeal—The Calcutta High Court have held that an order rejecting a memorandum of appeal as insufficiently stamped is not appealable as a decree and that the effect of O 7 r 13 read with sec 107 (2) is that the appellant have been decisions allowing as not duly presented (y), memorandum of appeal which is time barred is dismissed under the Limitation Act and such dismissal disposes of the appeal and is appealable as a decree (b) When an appeal is rejected under O 41, r 10 (2) for failure to furnish security for costs, there is no appeal for the order does not determine the rights of the parties (c)

Order returning memorandum of appeal—No appeal lies from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to be presented to the proper Court (d) Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal for amendment

Section 47—Execution proceedings—An execution proceeding though a proceeding in a suit is not a suit (e) The combined effect of sec 2(2) and sec 47 is that an order passed in execution proceedings will be tantamount to a decree if, (a) so far as regards the Court passing it, it conclusively determines a question, (b) arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and (c) relating to the execution of the decree (f) If it decides a question relating to the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree it falls within the scope of sec 47 and is a decree—but orders that are merely incidental and refer to the conduct of the proceedings are not within the section (g) Thus a decision refusing to recognize the transferee of a decree (h) or to record an adjustment of a decree (i), falls within sec 47 and is appealable as a decree But an order refusing leave to bid at an execution sale is an interlocutory order and is not appealable (j) The Bombay High Court has held that an order staying execution of a decree on security being furnished is an interlocutory order and not appealable (k), but the Lahore High Court after a review of all the authorities has come to the conclusion that such an order falls under sec 47 and is appealable (l) An order refusing to stay execution is an interlocutory order and not appealable (m)

Section 144—Restitution—The determination of a question under sec 144 is a decree and is appealable as such. See note Bar of Suit under sec 144 (2)

Appealable orders —Appealable orders are those specified in sec 104 and O 43, r 1. They are excluded from the definition of decree even though they may fall under sec 47 and would be decrees if the Code had not expressly excluded them eg an order setting aside or refusing to set aside a sale under O 21 r 92. The effect of this exclusion is to do away with the right of second appeal.

Order of dismissal for default—A suit may be dismissed for default of appearance under O. 9, r. 8. Such a dismissal is not a decree and is not appealable. Under the Code of 188⁹ there was a conflict of decisions the Madras High Court holding that the order was not appealable (n) while the other High Courts held that it was appealable (o). An appeal may be dismissed for default of appearance under O 41 r 11 (2), or r 17. Such an order of dismissal is not a decree and is not appealable (p). But an order dismissing an appeal under O 41 r 11 (1) has been held to be a decree (q).

There may also be a dismissal for default under O 9 r 3, if neither party appears when the suit is called on for hearing. This is also excluded from the definition of decree.

Non appealable orders—Orders that are not appealable are generally speaking, orders that are processual i.e. interlocutory or incidental orders regulating procedure but not deciding any of the matters in controversy in the suit. Such orders occur both in suits and in execution proceedings. Their number is legion and the following are cited merely by way of illustration. In suits—under sec 148 for enlargement of time (r) under sec 152 for amendment of a clerical error in a judgment (s) under O 9 r 9 granting an application for restoration of a suit (t) under O 9 r 13 granting an application to set aside an ex parte decree (u) under O 14 r 9 refusing to frame an issue (v). In execution proceedings—under O 21, r 40 refusing an application to arrest a judgment debtor (w) under O 21 r 66 settling the terms of a sale proclamation (x). See also cases cited under note Section 47—Execution proceedings p 11.

Decree holder—The definition in the Code of 1882 included a transferee of a decree but this was inconsistent with the provisions relating to execution whereby an oral transferee has no locus standi; the section therefore enacts that a transferee is not a decree holder unless he has been recognised by the Court. A decree for specific performance of an agreement for the sale of immovable property may be executed either by the plaintiff or the defendant either party being a decree holder in such a case (y).

(4) “district” means the local limits of the jurisdiction of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction (hereinafter called a “District Court”), and includes the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of a High Court.

Following this definition the expression District Court as used in the Inventions and Designs Act 5 of 1888 has been held to include a High Court in the exercise of ordinary original civil jurisdiction (z).

(5) “foreign Court” means a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India.

and is not established or continued by the Governor-General in Council

Foreign Court.—The Privy Council is not within this definition, for though it is a tribunal beyond the limits of British India, it is invested with judicial authority within it (a). But the High Court of Justice in England, whether it be the Chancery Division (b) or the King's Bench Division (c) is a foreign Court. The Ceylon Court also is a foreign Court (d) and so is the Supreme Court of Mauritius (e) and Courts in Native States (f). The British Cantonment of Secunderabad is part of the Hyderabad State and the Court of the District Judge, Secunderabad, is a foreign Court (g). As to suits on judgments of the High Court of Justice in England see notes to sec. 17 "A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment, etc."

(6) "foreign judgment" means the judgment of a foreign Court :

(7) "Government Pleader" includes any officer appointed by the local Government to perform all or any of the functions expressly imposed by this Code on the Government Pleader and also any pleader acting under the directions of the Government Pleader :

(8) "Judge" means the presiding officer of a Civil Court :

No judge can act in any matter in which he has any pecuniary interest, nor where he has any interest, though not a pecuniary one, sufficient to create a real bias (h).

(9) "judgment" means the statement given by the Judge of the grounds of a decree or order :

Judgment.—In England the word judgment is generally used in the same sense as decree in this Code. For the meaning of the word in the Letters Patent, see Appendix II.

(10) "judgment-debtor" means any person against whom a decree has been passed or an order capable of execution has been made :

(11) "legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased and where a party sues or is sued in a representative character the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued.

Legal representative.—The expression "legal representative" was not defined in the Code of 1832. In its strictest sense the term legal representative was limited to executors and administrators only (i), and in cases under the Indian Succession Act that is still the case (j) But its meaning was extended after many conflicting decisions to include heirs and also persons who without title either as executors, administrators or heirs were in possession of the estate of the deceased All these earlier cases are reviewed in Dinamoni v Flahadut Khan (l) and the definition settles the meaning of the term as there explained (l) See also notes to sec 50, sec 52, and O 22, r 3, "Party in a representative character" Where a person is a party in a representative character, the legal representative is the person who after his death represents the estate that is the subject matter of the suit Thus on the death of a trustee, or of a shebait of a mutt, his successor in office and not his executor or heir is the legal representative, and the suit would be continued by or against the successor under O 22, r 3 or r 4, a reversioner sues in a representative character as representing the reversionary right to the estate of the last male owner The legal representative of such reversioner is the next reversioner, and a suit by a reversioner to set aside an adoption by a widow may be continued on his death by the next reversioner (m) A suit by a Hindu daughter (n) or by a Hindu widow (o) to recover the father's or husband's estate is continued after her death by the next heirs entitled to come in after her, except in Bombay where the daughter takes an absolute estate It has been held that a coparcener leaves no estate in the coparcenary property at his death and so the surviving coparcener is not his legal representative with reference to that property (p) But a son who has inherited the property of his father is his legal representative against whom the decree can be executed under sec 50 (q) and the correctness of the decision that a surviving coparcener is not a legal representative has been doubted and it has been said that the son who takes the joint family estate by survivorship should be regarded as a person who in law represents the estate of the deceased person (r) See note 'Legal Representative' under O 22, r 3 The Official Assignee has been held to be the legal representative of the insolvent judgment debtor within the meaning of O 21, r 22 of the Code (s)

'Intermeddles with the estate'—One who intermeddles with the estate of a deceased person, even though it may be with part thereof, is a 'legal representative' within the meaning of this clause and is liable to the extent of the property taken possession of by him (t) But it has been held that a mere trespasser is not a legal representative as he has not intermeddled with the intention of representing the estate (u) If a person who is not the heir, wrongly brings himself on the record of a suit after the death of a party, he does not become a legal representative unless he in fact takes possession and so intermeddles with the estate of the deceased (v)

to the other side and counsel consents in spite of dissent or on terms different to those his client authorized (c) In some cases Courts have refused to inquire if there is such a limitation (d), and have refused to set aside a compromise entered into by counsel (e) But the true rule seems to be that the Court has power to interfere, and the House of Lords has held that the Court is not prevented by agreement of counsel from setting aside or refusing to enforce a compromise, that it is a matter for the discretion of the Court and that when in the particular circumstances of the case grave injustice would be done by allowing the compromise to stand the compromise may be set aside even though the limitation of counsel's authority was unknown to the other side (f) Similarly if the consent is given under a misapprehension or mistake and the other party acts on the ostensible authority of counsel the client will be bound But in such a case the consent given under a misapprehension may be withdrawn and the compromise set aside if the application is made before the order is actually drawn up and perfected (g) The application to have the suit restored to the list should be made before the decree is sealed (h) If the client is present in Court at the time of the compromise, it is not open to him to say that he did not consent, for if he desires the case to go on and counsel refuses and if after that he does not withdraw his authority from counsel to act for him, he must be taken to have agreed (i)

The implied authority of counsel is limited to the issues in the suit A compromise will not therefore be binding if it extends to matters outside the scope of the suit (i) The appointment of a receiver of debutter property in a partition suit is a collateral matter and not within the scope of counsel's authority, and an arrangement for the appointment of a party's attorney as receiver interrupts the relationship of attorney and client and will be set aside (j)

The implied authority of counsel is limited to acts and admissions coram judice or in Court and a compromise effected out of Court is not binding upon a client (k) But a compromise is not vitiated merely because counsel considered the matter in the corridor of the Court or in the Bar library (l)

Attorney or Solicitor—An attorney or solicitor is entitled, in the exercise of his discretion to enter into a compromise on behalf of his client, if he does so in a bona fide manner (m) A solicitor has implied authority by virtue of his position as agent in relation to his client (n) and his authority is limited to the issues in the suit

Pleader—Different considerations apply in the case of a pleader who derives his authority from an express writing the vakalatnama (o) A pleader cannot enter into a compromise on behalf of his client without his client's express authority (p)

Power to refer to arbitration—The law is the same as regards reference to arbitrators. Counsel has an implied power to consent to a reference and so has a solicitor on the record (g). But the authority does not extend to referring the case to arbitrators on terms different from those which the client has authorised (r). A pleader or vakil has no power to refer a case without the express authority of his client (s), nor to settle a case by the oath of the opposite party (f).

Authority to withdraw suit—Counsel has an implied power to withdraw an action (w). As regards vakils or pleaders it has been held that a vakalatnama couched in general terms suffices prima facie to authorise him to apply on behalf of his client for leave to withdraw a suit and in the absence of anything to show that the vakil had acted contrary to the client's instructions or otherwise was guilty of misconduct in making the application the client is bound by the act of his vakil (r).

Power to bind client by admission—Counsel (u) solicitors (x) and pleaders or vakils (y) have an implied authority to bind their clients by admissions of fact provided such admissions are made during the actual progress of litigation and not in mere conversation (z). A verbal admission by a pleader must be taken as a whole and must not be unduly pressed (a), but an admission of liability by a vakil is sufficient to warrant a decree against his client in the suit (b). The result is that the client will be bound by the admission even though it may be erroneous. But counsel, solicitor, or vakil cannot bind his client by an admission on a point of law. Hence if the admission be erroneous the client is free to repudiate it (c). It may here be observed that the omission of a pleader or counsel to argue a question of law, or his abandoning a question of law does not preclude the Court from dealing with the question (d).

Power to abandon issue—A pleader's general powers in the conduct of a suit include the power to abandon an issue which in his discretion, he thinks it inadvisable to press (e).

(18) "rules" means rules and forms contained in the First Schedule or made under section 122 or section 125

As to the relation of the body of the Code to the Rules see notes to s. 1, p. 3 para No (11)

(19) "share in a corporation" shall be deemed to include stock, debenture stock, debentures or bonds and

(20) "signed," save in the case of a judgment or decree, includes stamped

Signed—The definition is wider than in the General Clauses Act. Indians of rank sometimes use a stamp instead of a signing and inability to write is not a condition precedent to the use of a stamp (p). The Madras High Court has observed that there is no provision that initials may be made by a stamp (q)

3. [S 2] For the purposes of this Code, the District Court is subordinate to the High Court, and every Civil Court of a grade inferior to that of a District Court and every Court of Small Causes is subordinate to the High Court and District Court

Subordination of Courts

Subordination of Courts—The High Court with reference to civil proceedings is the highest Court of Appeal in the part of British India in which the Act or Regulation containing the expression operates see sec. 3 (24), General Clauses Act 1897. The enumeration of subordinate Courts is not exhaustive and a Collector exercising judicial functions under the Mamlatdars Courts Act is subject to the superintendence and control of the High Court (r)

Different rulings of different High Courts—Where there are different rulings of different High Courts on a particular point a Subordinate Judge should follow the decision in law of a Bench of the High Court to which he is subordinate unless the decision of the Bench has been overruled by a decision of a Full Bench of that Court or unless it has been overruled expressly or impliedly on an appeal to His Majesty in Council or unless the law has been altered by a subsequent Act of the Legislature (s)

(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the proposition contained in sub section (1), nothing in this Code shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any remedy which a landholder or landlord may have under any law for the time being in force for the recovery of rent of agricultural land from the produce of such land

Special or local law—The section does not mean that the Code does not apply to proceedings under special or local laws but only enacts that where there is an inconsistency the rules of the Code do not prevail (t) There is no inconsistency between the Code and sec 77 of the Railways Act 9 of 1890 and if a railway is owned by the Secretary of State in Council notice of a claim to the railway administration under sec 77 of the Railways Act will not dispense with the necessity for a notice under sec 80 of the Code (u) For instances of such inconsistencies the undermentioned cases (t) may be referred to The Mamlatdars Courts Act enacts its own special procedure which excludes that of the Code (w)

The section gives a local Act local validity and special procedure validity within its own sphere No local Legislature can prescribe procedure for any Court beyond its own jurisdiction (x)

Any special form of procedure—It has been held having regard to these words that where two Judges differ in an appeal from the Original Side of the High Court the special procedure laid down in cl 36 of the Letters Patent should be followed, and not the rule laid down in sec 98 of the Code (y) Sec 98 (3) which was added by Act 18 of 1928 gives effect to these decisions land used for agricultural purposes, but does not include a Civil Court having original jurisdiction under this Code to try such suits or proceedings as being suits or proceedings of a civil nature

Object of the section—The object of this section is to preserve the summary character of rent litigation under local laws.

6. [S. 6] Save in so far as is otherwise expressly provided, nothing herein contained shall operate to give any Court jurisdiction over suits the amount or value of the subject-matter of which exceeds the pecuniary limits (if any) of its ordinary jurisdiction

Pecuniary Jurisdiction

Otherwise expressly provided—The section must be read subject to the provisions of the Suits Valuation Act, 7 of 1887, which prescribes the mode of valuing certain suits for purposes of determining jurisdiction. Under sec 8 of that Act the valuation for Court fees and the valuation for jurisdiction in certain suits is the same. Under sec 7, clause (iv) (f) of the Court Fees Act, the valuation for purposes of Court fees in a suit for accounts lies in the discretion of the plaintiff. Therefore in a suit for accounts the plaintiff's valuation in the plaint fixes the jurisdiction of the Court (2)

Pecuniary limits of jurisdiction—See notes to sec 15 under the head "Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit"

Court may pass a decree in excess of its pecuniary jurisdiction—Section 6 refers to the Court's power to entertain a suit. It is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which prima facie determines the jurisdiction of the Court and not the amount which may be found or decreed by the Court (a). If the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint in a suit for accounts is within the pecuniary limits of the Court's jurisdiction, the Court may pass a decree for a sum in excess of the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (b)

Under sec 8 of the Suits Valuation Act the value of the subject matter of the suit is Rs 130. The parties arrive at a compromise whereby the first defendant is to pay Rs 6000 and the second defendant Rs 5000 to the plaintiff. The Court may pass a decree in terms of the compromise although it has jurisdiction limited to suits of which the value of the subject matter does not exceed Rs 500. Ishwarappa v Dhanji (1932) 56 Bom 23, 137 IC 702, (32) A B 111 possession of land and mesne profits prior to the date of the suit, and there is also a prayer for mesne profits from institution of the suit which are claimed or assessed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsiff, the Munsiff has jurisdiction to fix the mesne profits from and after the date of the institution of the suit and to pass a decree therefor although the amount may be beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction (c)

A sues B for possession of land valued at Rs 686 and for the mesne profits up to the date of the suit valued approximately at Rs 200 and for mesne profits subsequent to the date of the suit not valued at all. The suit is brought in the Court of a Munsiff whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 1 000. A decree is passed in the suit for the plaintiff for possession and for mesne profits up to the date of the suit. Subsequently the plaintiff applies to the Munsiff for assessment of mesne profits after the date of the suit claiming Rs 60 000 for such profits. The Munsiff can pass a decree for Rs 60 000 though the amount exceeds his pecuniary jurisdiction.

Changes in the section—The words in italics were substituted by Act I of 1926 for the words 'so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders' which occurred in cl (1) of the original section after the words and figures 'sections 94 and 95'

Attachment before judgment by Provincial Small Cause Court.—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to attach movable property before judgment. An attachment before judgment is not one of the interlocutory orders referred to in cl (1) of the section (d)

As regards immovable property there were conflicting decisions of the Calcutta High Court on the question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of such property before judgment. The whole question was considered by a Full Bench of that High Court in the unmentioned case (e) and it was held by a majority that a Court of Small Causes has such jurisdiction, but expressed a doubt as to the intention of the Legislature in the matter when the Code was passed in 1908. To resolve that doubt the words in italics were substituted by Act I of 1926 for the words 'so far as they relate to injunction and interlocutory orders' which occurred in cl (b) of the original section after the words 'sections 94 and 95'. To make the matter clearer a new rule, being rule 13, was added to O 38 by the same Act.

8. [S. 8.] Save as provided in sections 24, 38 to 41, 75, clauses (a), (b) and (c), 76, 77 and 155 to 158, and by the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, the provisions in the body of this Code shall not extend to any suit or proceeding in any Court of Small Causes established in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay

Provided that—

- (1) the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay as the case may be may, from time to time, by notification in the local official Gazette, direct that any such provisions not inconsistent with the express provisions of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, and with such modifications and adaptations as may be specified in the notification, shall extend to suits or proceedings or any class of suits or proceedings in such Court
- (2) all rules heretofore made by any of the said High Courts under section 9 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, 1882, shall be deemed to have been validly made

PART I.

Suits in General.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS AND RES JUDICATA.

9. [S. 11] The Courts shall (subject to the provisions herein contained) have jurisdiction to try all suits of a civil nature excepting suits of which their cognizance is either expressly or impliedly barred.

Explanation—A suit in which the right to property or to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature, notwithstanding that such right may depend entirely on the decision of questions as to religious rites or ceremonies.

Alterations in the section—The words 'either expressly or impliedly barred' have been substituted for the words 'barred by any enactment for the time being in force' which occurred in sec 11 of the Code of 1882. The latter words were held to mean expressly barred (f)

Onus—A party seeking to oust the jurisdiction of ordinary Civil Courts must establish his right to do so (g)

Suits of a civil nature—Suits may be divided into two classes—(1) those which are of a civil nature, and (2) those which are not of a civil nature. It is suits only of a civil nature which a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain. A civil Court has no jurisdiction to try suits which are not of a civil nature. The explanation shews that if the principal or only question in the suit is a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies the suit is not of a civil nature, for it deals not with the rights of the citizen but with matters that are purely social. But when (1) a caste question or a question relating to religious rites or ceremonies is not the principal question in the suit, but is merely a subsidiary question, and (2) the principal question is of a civil nature, e.g., a question as to any right to property or to an office or to any other civil right, and (3) the principal question which is of a civil nature cannot be determined without deciding the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies, the Court has the power to decide the caste question or question relating to religious rites or ceremonies to enable it to decide the principal question (h). It is upon this principle that the Explanation to the section is based. We may therefore say that a suit is of a civil nature if the principal question in the suit relates to a civil right. The mere fact that the determination of such a question depends entirely on the decision of caste questions or question as to religious rites or ceremonies does not take the suit out of the category of suits of a civil nature (see the Explanation to the section). In Hukumchand v Maharaj Bahadur (i) one sect of Jains sued another sect to restrain acts which were said to be a desecration of the sacred hill of Parasannath and the Privy Council said that whether the acts complained of were sacrilegious was a matter for the Jains themselves, but the civil Courts were only concerned with them in so far as they are relevant to questions of a civil right, such as the plaintiff's right of worship, and that the issue must be, not whether the acts complained of were in accordance with orthodoxy or with previous practice, but whether they did in fact interfere with the plaintiff's right of worship. We now proceed to consider the leading cases in which the Courts have refused to try suits on the ground either (1) that the principal question in the suit was a caste question, or (2) that it related to religious rites or ceremonies.

Suits in which the principal question is a caste question are not suits of a civil nature—A caste is any well defined native community (be it Hindu or Mahomedan) governed for certain internal purposes by its own rules and regulations (j). A caste question is one which relates to matters affecting the internal autonomy of the caste and its social relations (k).

To determine whether or not a question is a caste question, the test is—Would the cognizance of the matter in dispute by the Court be an interference with the autonomy of the caste? Would the Court be deciding the question which the caste as a self governing body is entitled to decide for itself? If yes, the question is a caste question and a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain it (l). Thus a caste may pass a resolution depriving a member of man pu invitation, or invitation to dinner, or to munj or other ceremonies, for an alleged breach of a caste rule. The excluded member has no remedy in law, for all that he has lost is a social privilege, and not a legal right, and the caste is the only tribunal to which a casteman deprived of that privilege can resort. A civil Court has no power by its decree to compel the members of a caste to invite a casteman to dinner or to any ceremony (m). Similarly a Court has no power to compel barbers belonging to a certain caste to shave a casteman or to pare his nails though the party aggrieved may allege that he would lose caste by the loss of service at the hands of the barbers (n). On the same principle a member of a caste is not entitled to any remedy in law if the other members refuse to go to his house on the occasion of a death in his family and assist him in the removal of the dead body, though they may, in doing so, break a rule of the caste. It is not for a Court of law to enforce a caste rule or resolution: it is for the caste itself that makes the rule or passes the resolution to do so (o). Hence a Court will not compel a defaulting member to pay to the caste a sum of money which by a resolution of the caste every casteman is liable to pay on the occasion of a marriage in his family (p).

Expulsion from caste—To exclude a member of a caste from invitation to caste dinners or ceremonies is, as stated above, to deprive him of a social privilege. But to expel him from the caste is to deprive him of a legal right which forms part of his status. Hence a suit will lie for a declaration that the plaintiff is entitled to be re-admitted into the caste and also for damages for expulsion from the caste (q). But to entitle the plaintiff to a decree it must be shown that his excommunication was wrongful and the Court will in such cases enquire into the validity of the sentence of excommunication. Excommunication is wrongful, if a member is expelled from the caste without opportunity of explanation being offered to him (r). It is also wrongful if a member is expelled for an alleged breach of a caste rule which, as a matter of fact, he has not broken (s). In the mufassal of Bombay, however, a suit does not lie for restoration to caste, the cognizance of such a suit being expressly barred by Bombay Regulation II of 1827, s. 21 (t). But a suit is maintainable for damages on account of an alleged injury to the case and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party

A. to defamation for expulsion from caste, see the undermentioned cases (u)

Suits in which the principal question relates to religious rites or ceremonies are not suits of a civil nature.—Thus a suit will not lie to establish a right to parade bullocks on certain days (r) or to compel *pujari*s to adorn an idol at certain seasons (s) or to install it in a particular temple instead of in another (x). There is no right of a civil nature involved in these cases and the Court will not pronounce on any religious doctrine unless it is necessary to do so in order to determine rights of property (y)

Suits for vindication of a mere dignity attached to an office are not suits of a civil nature.—A claim by a Savami (arch priest) that he is entitled to be carried on the high road of a town or village in a palanquin on ceremonial occasions will not be entertained by a civil Court (v). What is claimed by the plaintiff in such a case is a mere mark of honour appended to the office of a Savami. Civil Courts should discourage as much as possible claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege although connected with an office. For the same reason a suit will not lie for a declaration that the plaintiff as paroda or spiritual leader is entitled to be received at a paroda by the warden of the paroda with the honours and emoluments due to his rank on the occasion of the annual festival of the paroda. The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observances in accordance with the ritual or conventional practices of their race or sect is in the absence of express legal recognition and provision, an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature. Of such obligations the present civil Court cannot take cognizance (a). Following this rule the Courts have declined to entertain claims made by holders of religious office to precedence in worship such as a claim to be the first to worship the deity and to receive gifts of rice and coconut on certain public religious ceremonies (b). They have likewise declined to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries (c). It is important to note that the suit in each of the above cases was not to establish a right to an office but for a declaration that the plaintiff was by virtue of his office entitled to certain tokens of dignity or to rights of privilege. In other words the suit was not for a claim to an office but to vindicate an alleged dignity attached to an office. A suit for an office is of a civil nature but a suit for vindication of a mere dignity though connected with an office is not. But if honours be attached to an office by way of remuneration in other words as part of its emoluments a civil Court can entertain a suit for such honours (d).

"Office"—Suits in which the principal question is as to a civil or legal right are suits of a civil nature. The right to an office is a right of a civil nature. Therefore suits in which the principal question relates to the right to an office are suits of a civil nature and they are not the less so because the right claimed may depend on the decisions of caste questions or questions as to religious rites or ceremonies or even religious tenets (e). See the Explanation to the section.

Suits for secular office—When no remuneration attaches to the office of the secretary of an Association (registered under Act 21 of 1860), a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the secretary of the Association and that his dismissal from the office was not justified by the rules of the Association is not maintainable in a civil Court, especially if the Association has the power to alter its rules from time to time. The reason is that in such a case no decree which a civil Court may pass in plaintiff's favour could prevent the Association from altering its rules and then dispensing with the plaintiff's services and employing some one else (f).

Suits for religious office—Quære whether every suit for a religious office is a suit of a civil nature? The explanation to the section assumes that a suit in which the right to an office is contested is a suit of a civil nature. Now an office may be either secular or religious in its character. We are here principally concerned with an office of a religious character, for the question as to religious rites and ceremonies contemplated by the Explanation can only arise when the right to a religious office is contested. Religious offices may be divided into two classes, namely,—

I.—Those to which fees are appurtenant as of right, such as the office of the Kazi of Bombay, or of the Joshi of a village, or the Upadhayaya of a caste.

II.—Those to which no fees are attached, but which entitled the holder thereof to receive such gratuities as may be paid to him, such as the office of pujari or of an officiating priest in a temple, or of the hya of a math.

Fees are to be distinguished from gratuities. When fees are attached to an office the holder of the office is entitled on performance of the services to the stipulated or customary fees. Thus a Kazi or Joshi is entitled on performing a marriage ceremony to the marriage fee, and if the fee is not paid to him he may enforce payment by a suit. In fact, a fee is a sum which the holder of an office is entitled to demand as payment for the execution of functions attached to the office. Besides the fee paid to a Kazi or to a Joshi on the occasion of a marriage, there may be gratuities paid to him which are entirely voluntary in their character. If a person invites a Joshi for performing a marriage ceremony at his place and pays him the fee but no gratuity, a suit will not lie at the instance of the Joshi for payment to him of any sum by way of gratuity though it may be usual to pay gratuities on such occasions, the reason is that there is no obligation in law on the part of the person inviting a Joshi to make any payment by way of gratuity (g). The same remark applies to holders of religious offices referred to in class II above.

The question which concerns us at present is whether a suit will lie at the instance of the holder of a religious office for disturbing him in the exercise of his office? If the office is wrongfully usurped, can the person claiming to be the rightful holder of the office sue the intruder in a civil Court for a declaration that he is entitled to the office? Will a civil Court entertain such a suit? To answer these questions we must deal with the two classes of religious offices separately.

As regards religious offices of the first class, that is, offices to which fees are attached, there is no doubt that a suit will lie against an intruder for a declaration that the office is vested in the plaintiff. Such a suit is a suit of a civil nature (h).

of an alleged injury to the caste and character of the plaintiff arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party.

As to defamation for expulsion from caste, see the undermentioned cases (v).

Suits in which the principal question relates to religious rites or ceremonies are not suits of a civil nature—Thus a suit will not lie to establish a right to parade bullocks on certain days (t), or to compel punjaris to adorn an idol at certain seasons (w), or to instal it in a particular temple instead of in another (x). There is no right of a civil nature involved in these cases, and the Court will not pronounce on any religious doctrine unless it is necessary to do so in order to determine rights of property (y).

Suits for vindication of a mere dignity attached to an office are not suits of a civil nature—A claim by a Swami (arch priest) that he is entitled to be carried on the high road of a town or village in a palanquin on ceremonial occasions will not be entertained by a civil Court (z). What is claimed by the plaintiff in such a case is a mere mark of honour appended to the office of a Swami. Civil Courts should discourage as much as possible claims of so unsubstantial and objectionable a nature and they ought not to be involved in the determination of trivial questions of dignity and privilege although connected with an office. For the same reason a suit will not lie for a declaration that the plaintiff as gurullal or spiritual leader is entitled to be received at a pagoda by the wardens of the pagoda with the honours and emoluments due to his rank on the occasion of the annual festival of the pagoda. "The duty of individuals to submit to and perform certain religious observances in accordance with the ritual or conventional practices of their race or sect is, in the absence of express legal recognition and provision, an imperfect obligation of a moral and not a civil nature. Of such obligations the present civil Court cannot take cognizance (a). Following this rule, the Courts have declined to entertain claims made by holders of religious office to precedence in worship, such as a claim to be the first to worship the deity and to receive gifts of rice and cocoanuts on certain public religious ceremonies (b). They have likewise declined to decide disputes as to precedence or privilege between purely religious functionaries (c). It is important to note that the suit in each of the above cases was not to establish a right to an office, but for a declaration that the plaintiff was, by virtue of his office, entitled to certain honours."

with an office, is not. But if honours be attached to an office by way of remuneration, in other words, as part of its emoluments, a civil Court can entertain a suit for such honours (d).

"Office"—Suits in which the principal question is as to a civil or legal right are suits of a civil nature. The right to an "office" is a right of a civil nature. Therefore suits in which the principal question relates to the right to an "office" are suits of a civil nature, and they are not the less so because the right claimed may depend on the

Turning now to religious offices of the second class, the question that faces us is whether a suit will lie for an office to which no fees are attached? Different views have been held on this point by different Courts. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that a suit by a person claiming to be entitled to a religious office against a usurper for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to the office is a suit of a civil nature, and will therefore be entertained by a civil Court though no emoluments are attached to the office. This conclusion is based upon the reasoning that a religious office though no fees are attached to it, is an "office" within the meaning of the Explanation to this section and that the section assumes that a suit for an "office" is a suit of a civil nature. The office in that case was that of musicians who chanted holy songs in a satra at a certain village (i). In another case, the office was that of a shabait, and the suit was by one member of a family against another for a declaration of a hereditary right to officiate as shabait at the worship performed by votaries at the foot of a certain tree. It was held that the suit was maintainable. In this case also there were no fees attached to the office but voluntary offerings were made by the votaries (j). In a third case the right claimed by the plaintiff was the right of worship of Saradisa Haragouri Thakurani and to make certain offerings to the image installed in the place of worship, and it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain a suit against a usurper (k). It is worthy of note that in all these cases the office was one attached to a place as distinguished from an absolutely personal office.

On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that a suit does not lie for a religious office to which no fees are attached. According to that Court a religious office to which no fees are attached is not an "office" within the meaning of this section (l). The office in one of these cases was that of the priest of Samayacharm whose duty was to exercise spiritual and moral supervision over a certain class of persons.

As regards Bombay decisions, if we are to reconcile them all, we must divide them into two classes, namely, (1) those in which the religious office is attached to a temple, shrine, or sacred spot, and (2) those in which the office is entirely personal in its character. And it may be safely said that a suit will lie for a religious office which is attached to a place, though no fees are appurtenant to it, such as the office of an officiating priest in a temple or of the Aya of a math (m). But a suit will not lie for an office to which no fees are attached, if the office be personal in its character, such as the office of Chakradary (n) [bearer on public occasions of the insignia of a caste], or the office of Guru (o). The distinction between offices that are attached to a place such as a temple or a math and offices that are in their nature personal is our own, and it must be said that none of the Bombay decisions turns expressly on any such distinction. This distinction has been devised to harmonize what would otherwise be a mass of conflicting decisions, and was approved by the High Court of Bombay in a later case where it was held that a right to perform Uras ceremonies and to collect offerings at the shrine of a saint appertains to a religious office and can be enforced by a suit (p). It must be observed, however, that there is one Bombay decision in which the office was a personal one and there were no fees attached to the office and yet it was held that a suit would lie for the office (q). The principal question in that case was whether a suit lies for the office of Khatib (preacher), regard being had to the fact that no fees were attached to the office, and it was held that it does. The Court said: "Had it been the intention of the Legislature that such a suit should not lie, the same would have been clearly provided for" (q). But if it is a question of the intention of the Legislature. It may be said that the Legislature intended that it should not occur in the Code of 1872, appears to have been suggested by the passage in a judgment in a Malabar case (1) in 1871 (a) which was approved in a subsequent case by the Privy Council (b), as if the religious offices in which the ceremonies were performed were attached. The Bombay High Court has also held that a suit will lie for the recovery of money which are payable to a holder of a religious office on the occasion of a festival which are not connected with any ceremony of the performance of any particular duty (c).

The High Court of Allahabad has held that a person entitled to perform Pong Pong (religious payments) which had been customary with him at a certain temple or shrine had a right to sue for the recovery of the same in a Court of law (d).

The Patna High Court has held that a right to sue at funeral ceremonies performed upon the banks of the Ganges between certain people which had been customary with them but merely gratuitous cannot be enforced in a civil Court (e).

Suits for recovery of fees attached to an office are suits of a civil nature, but not suits for recovery of gratuities.—It is settled law that if a person usurps an office to which another person is entitled and receives the fees of the office, he is bound to account to the rightful owner for them, and the rightful owner may sue the usurper to recover the fees properly payable to him. But the case is different where the payments are merely voluntary and a suit will not lie to recover voluntary gratuities that may have been received by the usurper (x). The reason is that where voluntary offerings are made, they must be taken to have been intended for the very person who was then actually performing the ceremony, whether rightfully or wrongfully, and, further, that it is quite possible that no gratuities would have been given at all if the rightful owner officiated at the ceremony instead of the usurper (y). The same principles apply when a suit is brought by the lawful holder of an office against a member of the caste for employing the usurper for performing ceremonies which the rightful holder was entitled to perform. Thus a village priest may be entitled by hereditary right to officiate and take fees in the families of a particular caste in the village and if a member of the caste employs an intruder in the office to perform the ceremonies the village priest is entitled to recover from the casteman the fees which would properly be payable to him if he had been employed to perform those ceremonies (y). But a suit will not lie against a casteman for a gratuity which the party might have refused to give if he had pleased (z). If for determining the plaintiff's right to the fees claimed it becomes necessary to determine incidentally the right to perform the ceremonies the Courts should try and decide that right (a). The above principles have been held to apply to Vaidik barbers who are entitled to render services as barbers on ceremonial occasions and to receive the customary fees (b).

The cases in which a suit by the rightful owner of a religious office against a usurper for recovery of voluntary gratuities has been held not to be maintainable must be distinguished from those where a suit is brought by a sharer in a religious office against his

It is worthy of note that in all these cases the office was one attached to a place as distinguished from an absolutely personal office.

F1 cannot maintain a suit against faction F2 for recovery of one ~~one~~ that a suit does or its value (4). Here the subject matter of the suit is caste property, and a Court a not against an outsider, but against another section of the caste.

As regards user of caste property, it has been laid down that the majority of a caste has the right to regulate the use of the property, and the minority is bound by the resolution of the majority provided the resolution is not so subversive of the interests of the minority as to amount to a complete denial of their rights. Thus if the majority of a caste passes a resolution that the caste oart should not be used for feasting any Brahmins, and the minority invites Brahmins to a feast in the oart, a suit will lie to restrain the minority from using the oart in contravention of the resolution (5).

Suits for inspection of accounts of caste property—Every member of a caste is, at all reasonable times and on proper demand, entitled to full and free inspection of all account books, papers and vouchers relating to the management of a caste property. This is a legal right which does not interfere with the autonomy of the castes. It is preliminary to a right to assert a claim to property and is incidental to the right to recover property which may be lost to the caste by misuse or misappropriation. A suit to enforce such a right is maintainable (6).

Interference with temple property—Removal or alteration of namams or religious marks in a temple, which are recognized as the badges of a particular religious denomination, amounts to an interference with property, and is a ground of action in civil Courts (7).

Interference with right of worship—Suits for a declaration of the right to worship or to offer prayers at a certain place are suits of a civil nature. It often happens that the members of a particular class are alone entitled to worship in the sanctuary of a temple, and to perform certain portions of the religious worship. Such a right is one of a civil nature, and it may be enforced by a suit in a civil Court (h)

Right of burial.—The right of burial is a civil right, and it has accordingly been held that an interference with the rights of the relatives of a deceased Mahomedan to recite prayers over his body before burial in front of a particular mosque, being an invasion of a civil right may be enforced by suit (m)

Religious processions.—Members of a religious body possess the right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances along a highway, and a suit will lie against those who prevent the procession with its observances. The worshippers in a mosque or temple which abut on a high road could not compel the processionists to intermit their worship while passing the mosque or temple on the ground that there was continuous worship there. But no one sect can claim the exclusive use of the highway for their worship (n)

Suit to set aside election of directors.—Such a suit is of a civil nature and the Court is entitled to take cognizance of it. The matters involved in such a suit are not matters of internal management of the company (o)

Suit to declare Municipal election valid.—When a District Magistrate acting ultra vires set aside a Municipal election, it was held that a suit would lie to declare the election valid (p)

Suit for administration of estate of a living Hindu debtor.—Such a suit is not cognizable by a civil Court (q)

Suits expressly barred.—The general rule of law is that when a legal right and an infringement thereof are alleged, a cause of action is disclosed, and unless there is a bar to the entertainment of a suit, the ordinary civil Courts are bound to entertain the claim (r). This is in substance the rule laid down in the present section which provides that suits though of a civil nature, are not triable by civil Courts, if the cognizance of such suits is expressly or impliedly barred. By expressly barred is meant barred by any enactment for the time being in force. Thus section 11 provides that no Court shall try a suit in which the matter in issue is res judicata, and section 47 bars a decree holder from filing a suit when he can take execution proceedings. Section 67 of the Income Tax Act provides that "no suit shall be brought in any civil Court to set aside or modify any assessment made" under that Act (s). Similarly, the Pensions Act 23 of 1871, s. 4, enacts that except as provided by that Act, no civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government (t). The cognizance of a suit by a civil Court may also be impliedly barred. Thus a suit by a 'proclaimed' person whose property has been attached and sold under secs. 87 and 88 of the Criminal Procedure Code, 1898, against the auction purchaser for its restoration is impliedly barred by the provisions of that Code, the remedies of the "proclaimed" person being limited to those provided for in the Code (u) The mere fact, however, that an enactment provides a summary remedy in certain cases does not constitute a bar to a regular suit Thus the provisions of Act 1 of 1871 do not bar a suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of cattle (v) Again a guardian may apply to the Court for possession of his ward under sec 25 of the Act, but this does not exclude a suit for that purpose (w) Another instance is O 21, r 95 (Code of 1882, s 318) That rule provides a summary remedy to which a purchaser at a sale in execution of a decree may resort to recover possession from a judgment debtor But it does not say that no suit shall lie to recover possession The purchaser may therefore resort to the remedy provided by that section, or he may at his option bring a regular suit (x) Further, the jurisdiction of a civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred (y) The general rule is that statutes affecting the jurisdiction of Courts are to be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers (z) It is for the party who seeks to oust the jurisdiction of a civil Court to establish his contention (a)

The bar is generally in matters affecting the Government revenue but it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that the jurisdiction of civil Courts to try suits brought by superior holders to recover their dues from inferior holders is not barred by sec 85 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code [Act 5 of 1879] (b) The same Court has held that sec 4 (c) of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act is not a bar to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the alleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue (c) Some Municipal Acts expressly bar suits relating to the assessment and levy of municipal rates and taxes but the civil Courts have, nevertheless jurisdiction to entertain such suits if it is shewn that the assessment is mala fide or perverse (d) or made on a wrong basis and ultra vires (e) or that the procedure enjoined by the Act has not been followed (f)

Suits impliedly barred—Besides suits of which the cognizance is expressly barred there are suits which are barred by general principles of law, such as suits relating to acts of State and public policy A civil Court has no jurisdiction to entertain suits in respect of acts of State (g) As to suits against the Secretary of State for India, see note under sec 79, Act of State No suit will lie to recover costs incurred in a criminal Court Again a suit will not lie for damages for defamatory statements made in the Court (h) The jurisdiction of the Court is impliedly barred in cases where a special tribunal is appointed by an Act of the legislature to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of the Act, as in disputed Municipal elections (h1)

Again a suit will not lie for damages for defamatory statements made in the course of a judicial proceeding by a party or by a witness. The ground of this principle is that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be an indictment for perjury (i)

Criminal Procedure Code 1898.—An order made by a magistrate under sec 17^m of the Criminal Procedure Code cannot be called into question in a civil Court but a suit will lie for a declaration of exclusive ownership of land which a magistrate has declared to be a public highway (j) but not a suit to close the road (l). No suit lies by a proclaimed person against an auction purchaser to recover from him property sold under secs 8ⁿ and 189 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (l). But a suit will lie to set aside an irregular sale under sec 88 (m) and a civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit for the recovery from Government of the proceeds of the sale of property attached and sold under secs 523 and 524 of the Criminal Procedure Code (n)

Political questions—The Courts of British India may determine the title of property situated within their jurisdiction belonging to a Native Prince though a political question is involved (o). But where the real object of the suit is to settle the right of succession to the throne and the property right involved is only contingent, the Court should decline jurisdiction (p)

10. [S 12] No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council

Explanation—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit founded on the same cause of action

Alterations in the section—The words proceed with the trial have been substituted for the word try. The words except where a suit has been stayed under section 20 which occurred at the commencement of the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 the words for the same relief which occurred after the words previously instituted suit and the words whether superior or inferior which occurred after the words any other Court have been omitted. The words litigating under the same title are new

Scope and object of the section.—The present section provides that where a suit is instituted in a Court to which the Code applies, the Court shall not proceed with the trial of the suit, if—

first the matter in issue in the suit is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, secondly, the previously instituted suit is pending—

(a) in the same Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, or

(b) in any other Court in British India (whether superior, inferior or co-ordinate) or

(c) in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council, or

(d) before His Majesty in Council, and thirdly, where the previously instituted suit is pending in any of the Courts mentioned in cl (b) or cl (c), such Court is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in the subsequent suit (g)

The object of the section is to prevent Courts of concurrent jurisdiction from simultaneously trying two parallel suits in respect of the same matter in issue. B, residing in Calcutta, has an agent A at Calicut employed to sell his goods there. A sues B in Calicut claiming a balance due upon an account in respect of dealings between him and B. During the pendency of the suit in the Calicut Court, B institutes a suit against A in Calcutta for an account and for damages caused by A's alleged negligence. Here the matter in issue in B's suit is directly and substantially in issue in A's suit, further both the suits are between the same parties, therefore, if the Court at Calicut is a Court of jurisdiction competent to grant the relief claimed in B's suit, the Calcutta Court must not proceed with the trial of B's suit and the suit in the Calicut Court, being the one instituted prior in point of time, should alone be proceeded with (r). But if A was B's agent at Pondicherry instead of at Calicut, and the suit was brought by him in the Pondicherry Court, the Calcutta Court would not be precluded from proceeding with the trial of B's suit the Pondicherry Court being a "foreign" Court. See the Explanation to the section.

The section does not of course empower one Court to stay the proceedings of another Court. A district Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction under the Provincial Insolvency Act 5 of 1920 cannot under this section stay a suit pending against the insolvent in a subordinate Court (s).

Whether the subject matter of both suits must be the same—Sec 12 of the Code of 1882 contained the words "for the same relief" after the words "previously instituted suit". Hence it was necessary for the application of the section not only that the matter in issue in the second suit should also be directly and substantially in issue in the first suit but that the second suit must be for the same relief as that claimed in the first suit (t). The words "for the same relief" have been omitted in the present section. The omission of these words, however, does not materially alter the law. In a Calcutta case (u) Rankin, C J, laid stress on the identity of the subject matter

When the two suits were for the recovery of cesses due for different periods the learned Chief Justice said:—"But it must be observed that a judgment for the recovery of subsequent cesses does not differ merely as being for a different form of relief. It is the same kind of relief for an entirely separate subject-matter, namely, a debt which was not in existence at all at the time of the previous suit. It does not follow, because the words 'the same relief' are no longer in the section, that sec. 10 is applicable to suits for recovery of successive rents". It has even been held that a suit cannot be stayed if the main issue in both the suits is the same and the subject matter of the second suit was different from that of the first suit (r). In these cases, the words "matter in issue" have been construed as having reference to the entire subject-matter in controversy between the parties. But in a later Calcutta case (u) it was pointed out that the section contains no reference to the subject-matter or to the cause of action and that one test for the applicability of the section is whether on a final decree being reached in the previous suit, such decree would operate as res judicata in the subsequent suit. Again in a case where the first suit was for dissolution of partnership and for accounts, and the subsequent suit was by one of the partners for the return of a deposit the section was held to apply (x).

Previously instituted suit.—Note that it is the pendency of the previously instituted suit that constitutes a bar to the trial of the subsequent suit. The word "suit" includes "appeal". It also includes an appeal to His Majesty in Council (y). But it does not include an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, for the application may not be granted at all, and, if granted, the applicant may not prefer any appeal (z). It seems that it does not also include applications under sec. 47 (a).

Shall not proceed with the trial.—These words indicate the action to be taken by the Court under this section. The second suit is not to be dismissed as barred; it is only the trial of the suit that is not to be proceeded with. That may render the institution of a subsequent suit unnecessary in many cases, but the section is no bar to the institution of such suit. Nay, there are cases in which it is necessary for a party to institute a regular suit to establish a right claimed by him, and failure to institute the suit within the period of limitation may preclude the party from asserting the right in any other suit or proceeding. Suits referred to in O 21, r 63 (Code of 1882, s 283) are suits of this character. This section does not dispense with the necessity of instituting such suits (b). A suit may be stayed under the section even after the hearing has commenced (c).

"Between the same parties."—The mere fact that the first suit is between Z and J as plaintiffs and W, X and Y, as defendants, and the second suit is between W as plaintiff and Z, J and S (not a party to the first suit) as defendants, will not take the case out of the operation of this section, if the other conditions of the section are satisfied (d).

Interlocutory orders pending stay.—A stay order under this section does not take away the power of the Court in the stayed suit to make interlocutory orders, such as orders for a receiver or an injunction, or an attachment before judgment (e).

Contract providing for place of suing.—There is nothing in this section to prevent the Court from giving effect to an agreement that suits in respect of transaction between the parties to the agreement should be brought in the High Court or Small Cause Court of Bombay (f)

Revision.—The Madras and Lahore High Courts hold that an order under this section is open to revision (g); but not so the Allahabad High Court (h). The High Court can interfere under sec 15 of the Charter (i)

Letters Patent Appeal.—An order staying a suit is a judgment under cl 1 of the Letters Patent and an appeal lies from it to the Privy Council (j)

Inherent power to grant stay.—See notes to O. 39, r. 1.

11. [S. 13.] No Court shall try any suit (p. 38) or issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue (pp. 40-45) has been directly and substantially in issue in a former suit (p. 38) between the same parties (p. 62), or between parties under whom they or any of them claim (p. 65), litigating under the same title (p. 70), in a Court competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue has been subsequently raised (p. 72), and has been heard and finally decided (p. 78) by such Court.

Res judicata

Explanation I.—The expression “former suit” shall denote a suit which has been decided prior to the suit in question whether or not it was instituted prior thereto (p. 38)

Explanation II.—For the purposes of this section, the competence of a Court shall be determined irrespective of any provisions as to a right of appeal from the decision of such Court (p. 77).

Explanation III.—The matter above referred to must in the former suit have been alleged by one party and either denied or admitted, expressly or impliedly, by the other (p. 41)

Explanation IV.—Any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (p. 48).

Explanation V.—Any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed to have been refused (p. 84).

Alterations in the section —

- 1 Explanation I is new See notes under the head "Former suit," p. 38 below.
- 2 Explanation II is also new See notes, p. 77 below
3. Explanation IV to sec. 13 of the Code of 1882 has been omitted The reason of the omission is stated to be that it was liable to misconstruction, and that the law was well established apart from the Explanation. The words of the Explanation if literally interpreted, would relieve parties from the bar of res judicata whenever there existed a latent power of alteration: see s. 149, O 20, r 3, and O 20, r 11.
- 4 The words "public right" have been added into Explanation VI in view of the provisions of sec. 91 relating to public nuisances

Res judicata.—The present section deals with the doctrine of res judicata The leading case on the subject is the Duchess of Kingston's case (1) and the following classic passage from the judgment of Sir William de Grey is a statement of the leading principles of res judicata:—

"From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true first that judgment of a Court of concurrent jurisdiction, directly upon on the point, is as a plea, a bar, or as evidence conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court, secondly, that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly on the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties, coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose. But neither the judgment of a Court, of concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment "

This passage summarizes the law enacted in this section The rule of res judicata is readily distinguished from the rule in sec. 10, for the latter relates to a res sub judice, that is, a matter which is pending judicial inquiry, while the rule in the present section relates to res judicata, that is, a matter adjudicated upon or a matter on which judgment has been pronounced. Section 10 bars the trial of a suit in which the matter directly and substantially in issue is pending adjudication in a previous suit The present section bars the trial of a suit or an issue in which the matter directly and substantially in issue has already been adjudicated upon in a previous suit Thus if A sues B for damages for breach of contract, and the suit is dismissed, a subsequent suit by A against B for damages for breach of the same contract is barred This is the rule of res judicata stated in its simplest form The question of A's right to claim damages from B having been decided in the previous suit, it becomes res judicata, and it cannot therefore be tried in another suit It would be useless and vexatious to subject B to another suit for the same cause Moreover, public policy requires that there should be an end of litigation. The question whether the decision is correct or erroneous has no bearing on the question whether it operates or does not operate as res judicata (1), otherwise every decision would be impugned as erroneous and there would be no finality (m) The rule of res judicata may thus be put upon two grounds—the one, the hardship to the individual that he should be vexed twice for the same cause, and the other, public policy, that it is in the interest of the State that there should be an end of litigation (n) Putting it in another form it may be said that every suit must be sustained by a cause of action, and there is no cause of action to sustain the second suit of A, it being merged in the judgment in the first (o)

Res judicata and estoppel—Res judicata is sometimes treated as part of the doctrine of estoppel, but the two are essentially different Estoppel is part of the law of evidence and prevents a man from saying one thing one time and the opposite thing at another time while res judicata precludes a man from avowing the same thing in successive litigations (p) Mahmud, J, in Sita Ram v Amir Begam (q) said:—“Perhaps the shortest way to describe the difference between the plea of res judicata and an estoppel, is to say that while the former prohibits the Court from entering into an inquiry at all as to a matter already adjudicated upon the latter prohibits a party after the inquiry has already been entered upon from proving anything which would contradict his own previous declaration or acts to the prejudice of another party who relying upon those declarations or acts has altered his position. In other words res judicata prohibits an inquiry in limine, whilst an estoppel is only a piece of evidence”

Suit—Section 11 applies in terms to cases where the matter in issue in a subsequent suit was in issue in a former suit A “suit” is a proceeding which is commenced by a plaint (s 26) The section is not exhaustive, and the doctrine of res judicata has been extended to adjudications in proceedings other than suits, see note Section not exhaustive, on p 86 below Some cases extending the doctrine beyond the limits of the Code have given a more extensive meaning to the word suit Thus when probate was refused after a contentious proceeding, the judgment was held to operate as res judicata for sec 295 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, requires the proceeding to take the form as far as possible of a suit (r) On the other hand although an application to file a private award is required by Sch II para 20, to be numbered and registered as a suit a refusal to file a private award has been held not to operate as res judicata (s) In a case decided under sec 10 of the Code it was said “the term suit is a very comprehensive one It is understood to apply to any proceeding in a Court of Justice by which an individual pursues that remedy in a Court of Justice which the law affords him, that the modes of proceeding may be various, but that if a right is litigated between parties in a Court of Justice the proceeding by which the decision of the Court is sought is a suit (t) It has been held that an insolvency proceeding is not a suit for the purpose of this section (u)

Former suit—The expression former suit means a previously decided suit, and the same interpretation applies to appeals Explanation I confirms previous decisions to the same effect (v) It matters not that the previously decided suit was instituted subsequently (w)

Suits tried together—one judgment.—There is a conflict of decisions as to whether if two suits involving common issues are disposed of in one judgment and an appeal is filed against the decree in one and not in the other the matter decided in the latter suit becomes res judicata so that it cannot be reopened in the appeal. The preponderance of judicial decisions in different High Courts is in favour of the view that the judgment not appealed against does not become res judicata (x). This is on the ground that a decision given simultaneously cannot be said to be a decision in a former suit. The Patna (y) and Rangoon (z) High Courts on the other hand apply the rule of res judicata. There is one decision of the Calcutta High Court in which Mookerjee, J., applied the rule of res judicata (a) but this was disapproved in a later decision of the same High Court (b). In this later case there were cross suits on an account. A sued B alleging that money was due to him (A), while B sued A alleging that money was due to him (B). These two suits were consolidated and tried as one suit but two decrees were passed. In one decree A's suit was dismissed, and in the other B's suit was partly decreed. A appealed from the decree dismissing his suit but did not appeal from the decree partly allowing B's suit. The Court disapproved of Mookerjee's decision and held that A's appeal was not barred by res judicata. The Court did not refer the case to a Full Bench to have Mookerjee's judgment overruled because it considered that the case did not strictly fall within the rule of res judicata for the finding that A owed B something was not in issue in a suit where A claimed relief against B.

In Ghansham Singh v Bholi Singh (c) A, a mortgagee, sued B, the mortgagor, to recover the amount due on a mortgage. The munsiff passed a decree for A and directed each party to bear his own costs. A appealed as to costs, and B filed a separate appeal as to the amount found due on the mortgage. Both appeals were disposed of in one judgment which reduced the amount payable on the mortgage and awarded A proportionate costs, but two decrees were drawn up one for each appeal. A filed a second appeal against the reduction of the decretal amount in B's appeal, but did not appeal against the decree in his own appeal. It was held that the decree in that appeal did not operate as res judicata as A had no reason to appeal from a decree which did not prejudice him. The Full Bench approved of the decision in Damodhar Das v Sheo Ram Das (d). This was also a case of one suit and two appeals. A sued B his agent to recover profits made by the agent in dealings on his own account. A's claim was decreed in part. A and B both appealed and the Court dismissed A's appeal and allowed B's appeal. Two decrees were drawn up which were exactly similar. A filed a second appeal against the decree in his own appeal and it was objected that the appeal was barred by res judicata as he had not appealed against the decree in B's appeal. The objection was overruled on the ground that the two decrees were in substance one decree. The Full Bench also distinguished the case of Zaharia v Debis (e). In this case there were two rival suits for pre-emption filed by two claimants A and B. B was a defendant in A's suit, and A was a defendant in B's suit. A's suit was dismissed and B's suit was decreed A filed an appeal against the decree in his suit but not against the decree in B's suit. The Full Bench said that it was not necessary to invoke the principle of res judicata for A had lost his right by allowing B's decree to become final against him. A later Full Bench has followed Dasmohar Das a case holding that decrees in cross appeals in the same suit are in fact one decree (f).

Suits tried together—separate judgments—If two cross suits are tried together and the same issue is tried and disposed of in two separate judgments the omission to appeal from the decree in one suit will make the decree in the other res judicata so as to bar the appeal (g).

Conditions of res judicata—It is not every matter decided in a former suit that can be pleaded as res judicata in a subsequent suit. To constitute a matter res judicata the following conditions must concur

- I—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue either actually (Explanation III) or constructively (Explanation IV) in the former suit (pp 49 62)
- II—The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim. Explanation I is to be read with this Condition (pp 62 70)
- III—The parties as aforesaid must have litigated under the same title in the former suit (pp 70 72)
- IV—The Court which decided the former suit must have been a Court competent to try the subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised. Explanation II is to be read with this Condition (pp 72 78)
- V—The matter directly and substantially in issue in the subsequent suit must have been heard and finally decided by the Court in the first suit. Explanation V is to be read with this Condition (pp 78 86)

The above Conditions are considered in order

CONDITION I

Matter directly and substantially in issue

Matters in issue may be classified as follows —

A. Matter actually in issue

Cause of action distinguished from matter directly and substantially in issue.—The expression used in sec 2 of the Code of 1839 was "cause of action". As to that expression their Lordships of the Privy Council said in Krishna Behari Roy v.

(1) Nandau v. Nazim (1909) 50 All 517 113 IC 93 (1-5) A A 2 4

Progenary Choudranee (h): "The expression 'cause of action' cannot be taken in its literal and most restricted sense, but however that may be, by the general law where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit, and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other, it cannot, in their opinion, be again tried in another suit between them." The expression "matter directly and substantially in issue" was first introduced in the corresponding section (s. 13) of the Code of 1877.

Matter directly and substantially in issue: Explanation III—It is not enough to constitute a matter res judicata that it was in issue in the former suit. It is further necessary that it must have been in issue directly and substantially. A matter cannot be said to have been "directly and substantially" in issue in a suit, unless it was alleged by one party and denied or admitted, either expressly or by necessary implication, by the other. It is not enough that the matter was alleged by one party (i). At the same time it is not necessary to constitute a matter "directly and substantially" in issue that a distinct issue should have been raised upon it, it is sufficient if the matter was in issue in substance (j). "The application of the rule [of res judicata] by the Courts in India should be influenced by no technical considerations of form, but by matter of substance within the limits allowed by law" (l). Thus if there is a mutual account between A and B, and A sues B and obtains a decree on the account, a subsequent suit by B against A on the same account for the same year, though beginning and ending about a month earlier, will be barred as res judicata (l). On the same principle an issue will be res judicata if the judgment of an appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided, although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (m).

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue—Every suit must involve a matter "directly and substantially" in issue. It may also involve a matter 'collaterally or incidentally' in issue. To constitute a matter res judicata it is necessary that it must be in issue "directly and substantially" in the suit under trial, and that it must have been in issue also "directly and substantially," as distinguished from "collaterally or incidentally," in a former suit.

A finding on an issue must be distinguished from an opinion as to the effect of a piece of evidence. In a suit for rent by A against B the Court held that a rent note in which certain land was not included was genuine. B then sued A for a declaration that the land was in fact part of his holding. In this suit the question of the genuineness or the rent note is not res judicata for the finding in the first suit is not the decision of an issue but an opinion as to the effect of a piece of evidence (n).

All matters involved in a suit may be 'directly and substantially' in issue, but they cannot all be "collaterally or incidentally" in issue. A collateral or incidental issue is one that is ancillary to a direct and substantive issue, the former is an auxiliary issue, the latter the principal issue. The expression "collaterally or incidentally" in issue implies that there is another matter which is "directly and substantially" in issue.

1 Distinction between matter "directly and substantially" in issue and matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue.—The leading case on the subject is Barrs v Jackson (o) Every suit must involve a matter or matters in respect of which relief is claimed by the plaintiff. It may also involve matters which, though there is no relief claimed in respect of them, are brought in issue for the purpose of deciding matters in respect of which relief is claimed.

Matter directly and substantially in issue—Every matter in respect of which relief is claimed in a suit is necessarily a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

Illustrations

1 A sues B for the rent due for the year 1907. The defence is that no rent is due. Here the claim for rent is the matter in respect of which relief is claimed. This therefore is a matter "directly and substantially" in issue.

2 A sues B (1) for a declaration of title to certain lands and (2) for the rent of those lands. B denies A's title to the lands, and contends that no rent is due. Here there are two matters in respect of which relief is claimed, namely, (1) the matter of title and (2) the claim for rent. Both these are matters "directly and substantially" in issue.

Matter collaterally or incidentally in issue—A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed but which is put in issue for the purpose of enabling the Court to adjudicate on a matter in respect of which relief is claimed may be "directly and substantially" in issue or it may be in issue "collaterally or incidentally". It would be a matter "directly and substantially" in issue, if it was necessary to decide it to adjudicate on the principal issue and if it was decided in fact the judgment was based upon that decision, otherwise it would be a matter "collaterally or incidentally" in issue. A matter cannot be directly and substantially in issue if the judgment would be correct whether that matter exists or not.

Illustration

A sues B for rent. B pleads abatement of rent on the ground that the area is less than that entered in the lease. The Court finds that the area is greater than that shewn in the lease. The finding as to the excess area is not res judicata for it is only ancillary to the direct and substantial issue whether the area is equal to that shewn in the lease or less (p).

Examination of pleadings and judgment—Whether a matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit is to be determined by a reference to the plaint, the written statement, the issues and judgment. Even if a point is not properly raised in the plaint, yet if both parties join issue upon a matter in dispute the decision will operate as res judicata (q). The decree may also be referred to, but it is not enough to refer to the decree without the judgment, for a decree states merely how a suit is disposed of, and it is in the judgment that the findings on the issues are recorded (r). The judgment is admissible under s 40 of the Evidence Act. See O 20, rr 5 and 6.

Suits for rent or other recurring liability.—The distinction between a matter directly and substantially in issue and a matter collaterally in issue is well illustrated by suits for rent or for other recurring liability. These may be divided into three classes, namely —

A.—Where the first suit is for rent and the subsequent suit is for title

B.—Where both suits are for rent or other recurring liability

C.—Where both suits relate to rate of rent or to the area for which rent is payable

4. First suit for rent, subsequent suit for title—In this class of cases it is clear that the subsequent suit being one for title, the question of title is a matter 'directly and substantially' in issue in that suit. Whichever party therefore raises the plea of res judicata in that suit must show that the question of title was also directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, that is in the previously decided suit. If the question of title was in issue in its entirety in the former suit it would be a matter that was 'directly and substantially' in issue in that suit. But if the issue in the former suit did not cover the entire question of title, in other words if it fell short of going to the very root of the title, and was confined only to some of the incidents of title the question of title would be a matter which was 'collaterally or incidentally' in issue in the former suit (a).

In the following illustrations it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are fulfilled

(a) A, claiming to be the chela and heir of a deceased mohunt sues B for rent of certain lands forming part of the estate of the mohunt. C claims that he, and not A, is the chela and heir of the deceased and that he is entitled to the rent. C is thereupon joined as a defendant to the suit. The issues raised are—

1. Whether A or C is the chela and heir of the mohunt?

2. Whether any and if so what rent is due from B?

The Court finds that A is the chela and heir of the mohunt. It also finds Rs. 2,500 due by B for rent and A's claim is decreed.

Subsequently C sues A for a declaration that he is the chela and heir of the mohunt and claims that as such he is entitled to the whole of the property left by the mohunt. A contends that the question 'who is the chela and heir of the deceased, is res judicata. Is the question res judicata?' The answer is that it is for though the former suit was for rent, the entire question of title to the property of the deceased was directly and substantially in issue in that suit and it was decided against C. Topondhee v Sreeputti (1880) 5 Cal 832. The widow sues B for rent of certain property forming part of the estate of her husband. C claims the rent on the ground that it was the joint property of himself and his deceased brother and that he became entitled to it by survivorship. C is thereupon joined as a defendant to the suit. The issues are—

1. Whether the deceased alone received the whole rent of the property in his lifetime, or whether the rent was received by him jointly with C?

2. Whether any and what rent is due by B?

next year's rent and the tenant is at liberty to set up to that suit any defence he thinks proper. The above proposition, however, is subject to this, and here comes in the doctrine of res judicata, that neither party is at liberty to re-open in the suit for rent for the next year any question that was substantially and necessarily tried and determined between them in the suit for rent for the previous year (2). For the essence of the doctrine of res judicata is that where a material issue has been tried and determined between the same parties in a proper suit and in a competent Court as to the status of one of them in relation to the other or as to a right or title claimed by either of them against the other, it cannot again be tried in another suit between them (a).

Maintenance—As regards maintenance, it is to be noted that a decree for maintenance at a particular rate is no bar to a subsequent suit for maintenance at an enhanced rate on the ground of altered circumstances, for the rate of maintenance is a variable quantity changing from time to time according to the circumstances of the parties affected by the decree (b). But a right to maintenance may be barred by res judicata (c).

C Rate of rent or area for which rent is payable—In this class of cases also both suits are for rent, the first suit being for rent for a particular period and the second for rent for a subsequent period. The matter which is pleaded as res judicata is not the plaintiff's title to the land of which the rent is claimed, but the rate of rent or the area for which rent is payable. If the Court in the first suit tries and determines the issue, "what is the proper rate of rent," or "what is the proper area for which rent is payable," the issue relates not merely to the rent for a particular period but to the rent payable for the full term of the lease, and the question as to the rate of rent or the area as the case may be will be res judicata in subsequent suits for rent for the remaining period of the lease (d).

Ex parte decree—Ex parte decrees operate to render the matter decided res judicata (e), and the defendant's failure to appear will not deprive the plaintiff of the full benefit of his decree (f). But in the case of a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte [see O D r 6, Code of 1882, s 100] the only matter that can be directly and substantially in issue is the matter in respect of which relief has been claimed by the plaintiff in the plaint. A matter in respect of which no relief is claimed cannot be 'directly and substantially' in issue in a suit in which a decree is passed ex parte though the Court may have gone out of its way and declared the plaintiff to be entitled to relief in respect of such matter. In a case where an Insolvency Court made an ex parte order declaring a mortgage to be void although no motion to that effect had been made by the Official Receiver, the decision could not operate as res judicata for the matter was never directly and substantially in issue (g).

Rs 500. Subsequently A sues B for rent due for the year 1907 also at the same rate. B appears at the hearing, and contends that the rate is Re 1 per square yard. B is not precluded from raising that contention, for the question of rate was not "directly and substantially" in issue between A and B in the former suit, and it cannot therefore be res judicata. Even if the Court in the former suit had declared that A was entitled to rent at the rate of Rs 2 per square yard, the question of rate would not be res judicata for A had not asked for a declaration in that suit in respect of the rate of rent. A's claim in the former suit was merely for arrears of rent amounting to Rs 500, and the decree in that suit has no greater effect than evidence that Rs 500 was due when the decree was passed. Had A in the former suit also prayed for a declaration in respect of the rate of rent as part of the substantive relief, and had the Court then declared that the rate of rent was Rs 2, the question of rate would have been res judicata though the decree was passed ex parte, for it would then have been a matter "directly and substantially" in issue. Madhusudan v. Brue (1899) 16 Cal 300.

A suit to set aside an ex parte decree on the ground that it was obtained by fraud may be barred by res judicata if an application to set it aside on the same ground has been dismissed under O 9, r 13. See note under that rule, 'Ex parte decree obtained by fraud'.

Suspension of rent—If the landlord's suit for rent for a particular period has been dismissed on the ground that the premises are let for one rent and that he has dispossessed the tenant of part of the tenure, then if the landlord sues again for rent for a subsequent period, the tenant claiming a suspension of rent must again prove that he has been kept out of possession during the period of the subsequent suit. This is because the onus of proving eviction is on the tenant, and the subject matter of the two suits is different (A).

Decree for injunction and res judicata—A sues B for an injunction restraining B from doing certain acts. The injunction is granted. B repeats the acts complained of in the suit. A again sues B for an injunction. The suit is barred as res judicata, for the relief claimed is covered by the injunction granted in the former suit, and A's remedy is to proceed against B in execution of the decree [O 21, r 32]. Where the decree is passed by a chartered High Court, A may proceed against B for contempt (s). See notes to s 50 below.

Suit under s 77, Registration Act and res judicata—If a suit under s 77 of the Registration Act to enforce registration of a sale deed is infructuous, the purchaser is not debarred from suing for specific performance of the contract of sale (j). But when a party refuses to admit execution on the ground that the document has been materially altered and the Court finds in a suit under s 77 of the Registration Act that the document has been materially altered the finding operates as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties (l).

Decree for restitution of conjugal rights and res judicata—A sues B, his wife, for restitution of conjugal rights. Restitution is granted and B goes and lives with A (that is to say, the decree is satisfied). B again leaves A, and A again sues B for the same relief. The suit is not barred as res judicata (l). The distinction between this and the case of an injunction is that while in a suit for injunction the defendant is for ever restrained from doing the acts complained of, the wife cannot be directed in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights to live with her husband for the rest of her life, for many things may occur entitling her to leave him, e.g., gross cruelty.

Custom—A mere negative finding that a custom is not proved will not operate as res judicata, for one man may prove more than another (m)

Decree for possession conditional on payment.—Where in a suit by the heirs of a Mahomedan against his widow in possession of his estate in lieu of her dower a decree is passed against her that they should have possession of their shares of the estate upon payment of a proportionate part of the dower debt within six months and that upon failure to pay their suit should be dismissed, and the plaintiffs fail to pay within six months the decree is no bar to a subsequent suit for immediate possession by the same plaintiffs against the widow on the ground that the dower debt had in the meantime been satisfied out of the income of the estate in the hands of the widow (n). A right to get possession of land at the date when the suit to recover it is instituted is a wholly different thing, a wholly different res, from the right to recover it at some future time and possibly under wholly altered circumstances (o). So a consent decree between a usufructuary mortgagee and his mortgagor tenant will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by the latter to redeem the mortgagee (p).

Subject matter of suits may be different.—As the test of res judicata is the matter directly and substantially in issue, it follows that the subject matter of the second suit may be entirely different. Thus if A claims certain property as the adopted son of X, and the defendant denies the adoption, a finding in A's favour on the issue as to adoption will be binding on the defendant as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against the same defendant to recover another property claimed under the same title (q). It is not open to the defendant to contend that the properties claimed in the two suits being different, the decision on the question of A's adoption in the first suit cannot operate as res judicata in the second. On the same principle where in a suit brought by A against B for possession of one of two properties comprised in a sale deed passed by B to A, B contends that the deed is fictitious, and the Court finds that the deed is fictitious, the finding that the sale deed is invalid will operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by A against B to recover the other property under the same sale deed (r). Similarly, in the illustration cited under class B of rent suits (p. 44 above) it is no answer to the plea of res judicata that the subject matters of the two suits are different. The reason is that the matter directly and substantially in issue in both the suits is the same, namely, whether the particular land of which the rent is claimed is rent free, and the decision therefore on that issue in the first suit operates as res judicata in the subsequent suit. But the decision cannot apply to other lands unless they form part of the same tenure (s).

From the same fundamental principle that the matter directly and substantially in issue, and not the subject matter, constitutes the test of res judicata it also follows that where a matter directly and substantially in issue in a suit is not the same as that in a previously decided suit, the trial of that matter will not be barred as res judicata though the subject matter of the two suits may be the same (t).

Where both the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are the same in both the suits, the matter in issue will be res judicata not because of the identity of the subject matter, but because of the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue (u) Where the matter directly and substantially in issue and the subject matter are both different in the two suits, the matter in issue is not res judicata not because the subject matters are different, but because the matters directly and substantially in issue in the two suits are different (t)

B Matter which might and ought to have been made ground of attack or defence.

Matter constructively in issue Explanation IV—A matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence is a matter which is constructively in issue In the cases cited in the note under “A—actually in issue Explanation III the matters were ‘actually in issue for they were actually alleged by one party and denied by the other It often happens, however, that a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack by the plaintiff to substantiate the relief claimed by him in the suit is not alleged by him as a ground of attack, and also that a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of defence by the defendant is not set up as a ground of defence A matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit, but which has not been alleged as a ground of attack or defence, will be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (Explanation IV), that is to say, though it has not been actually in issue directly and substantially it will be regarded as having been constructively in issue directly and substantially This section draws no distinction between the claim that was actually made in a suit and the claim that might and ought to have been made If the parties had an opportunity of controverting it, that is the same thing as if the matter had been actually controverted and decided (w) The plea of res judicata applies, except in special cases, not only to points on which the Court was actually required by the parties to form an opinion and to pronounce judgment, but to every point which properly belonged to the subject of the litigation and which the parties exercising reasonable diligence might have brought forward at the time (x)

Where a matter has been actually in issue, it is necessary to constitute the matter res judicata that it should have been heard and finally decided But where a matter has been constructively in issue, it could not, from the very nature of the case, be heard and decided, and it will be deemed to have been heard and decided against the party omitting to allege it This is in accordance with the view of the section taken by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay (y) In Kailash Mondal v Baroda Sundar Das (z), Banerjee, J, observed that though a matter, which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence should be deemed as provided by Explanation IV to have been directly and substantially in issue, yet it could not be deemed to have been ‘heard and finally decided’ as there was nothing in Explanation IV to suggest that such matter should also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided This view was followed in a subsequent case (a), but it is obviously incorrect, and it was rejected by the same Court in later cases (b), and it has been dissented from by the High Court of Lahore (c). Moreover, in a recent case, the Judicial Committee took exception to the language in which the observations of Baggallay, J., were couched saying that the language was not so careful as it might have been (d). The Privy Council case illustrates the rigidity with which the principle laid down in Explanation IV is to be applied. In that case it was held that where a matter which might and ought to have been made a ground of attack is not raised in the plaint, and an application is afterwards made to amend the plaint, but it is refused, the matter will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit. See ill 4 below.

The Court finds that A and X were separate and the suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B for the recovery of the same property, alleging that as the nearest reversionary heir of X, he became entitled to the property on the death of the widow, and that the alienation made by her in favour of B was not binding upon him. The suit is barred as res judicata. A might and ought to have set up the title by heirship as a ground of attack in the former suit. 4 A, claiming as the next reversioner of a deceased Hindu, sued his widow for a declaration that a gift by her to D of property inherited by her from her husband was void. D was joined as a party defendant, and so also G who claimed to be a reversioner nearer than A. As to G, A alleged that he was colluding with the widow and the donee D. The defence was that G was the nearest reversioner and the only person entitled to dispute the gift. In this state of pleadings the widow died. On the death of the widow the question of collusion became comparatively unimportant, for if G was the nearest heir A could get no title to the property. A then applied for leave to amend the plaint by setting forth the death of the widow, and claiming that he had become entitled to institute a suit for possession and by setting up a family custom that he was equal in degree with G. The application was rejected on the ground that it was an attempt to introduce a new case. The question then arose whether it was worthwhile contesting the suit. A's counsel admitted that, apart from custom, A was one degree more remote than G and that if A could not make out the case of a family custom, the suit must fail. The trial judge thereupon dismissed the suit with costs but gave liberty to A to bring a fresh suit for possession. Subsequently A sued D and G for possession of one half of the property founding his title on family custom. The Privy Council held that the second suit was barred for A 'might and ought' to have alleged the family custom in the first suit it being clearly a 'ground of attack' in that suit. As the first suit was dismissed and not withdrawn under O 23 the trial judge had no power to grant leave to bring a fresh suit. Fateh Singh v Jagannath Balsh Singh (1925) 52 I A 100 47 All 158 (25) A P C 55

5 A sues B, C, D and E as joint tenants for rent on the basis of a pottah. The property in respect of which the rent is claimed consists of 25 kattas of land. None of the defendants appears in the suit and a decree is passed against them ex parte. Subsequently A sues B, C, D and E for rent for a subsequent period. B appears and contends that he does not hold the land jointly with C, D and E and that he is liable only for one fourth rent for one fourth of the whole area. B is precluded from setting up the case of separate tenancy, because he might and ought to have set up that case in the previous suit. It is immaterial that the decree in the previous suit was passed ex parte. Sarojini v Lakhi Priya (1924) 29 C W N 253 85 I C 123 (25) A C 427

6 In April 1921 a consent order was made referring to arbitration three suits relating to syndicates of two six and ten firms each. In a chamber summons for extension of time for making the award some of the defendants objected that the syndicate of ten was an illegal association as it was not registered under sec 4 of the Companies Act although it was composed of more than 20 persons. These defendants therefore objected that the reference was invalid. But in August 1927 a consent order was made superseding the reference of April 1921 and referring to arbitration the same three suits along with two other suits also. In this consent order all the parties agreed that the

7 A, a Mohamedan heir sued to recover his share of the inheritance from the widow of the deceased who was in possession of her husband's estate in lieu of dower. A was decreed subject to the payment of Rs 75 22½ less the profits of the property in the possession of the widow from the date of the decree to the date of delivery of possession.

More than 20 years later a legal representative sued the representatives of the widow alleging that the amount of the decree had been satisfied out of the usufruct. The widow's representatives urged that interest should be added to the decretal amount which was the balance of the dowry debt. The Privy Council held that the claim to interest might and ought to have been made a ground of defence in the first suit and that it was barred by res judicata in the second suit. Mst Narsara Begum v Mst Dulafro Begum (1930) 57 I A. 181, 52 All 273, 126 I C 430 (30) A PC 177

Test.—The question whether a matter might have been made a ground of attack or defence in the former suit rarely presents any difficulty. Whether it ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence depends on the facts of each case. As a general rule every ground of attack with reference to the title sued on must be pleaded if necessary in the alternative (e), for the plaintiff will not be allowed to make out a fresh case afterwards. Thus if a plaintiff sues for possession on the ground of ownership, and his suit is dismissed, he cannot afterwards claim possession as mortgagee, for it was an alternative ground of attack which he did not raise in the first suit (f). If the matter raised as a defence would have defeated, varied, or in any way affected the decree in the previous suit, it ought to have been raised (g). Conversely, if the decree in the previous suit is inconsistent with a defence which ought to have been raised, that defence must be deemed to have been raised and finally decided, and is barred by res judicata (h). Thus if the plaintiff sues on a contract and obtains a decree, the defendant cannot afterwards sue for rescission of the contract on the ground that it did not fully represent the agreement between the parties (i). If a matter could have been set up as a ground of attack or defence in the former suit, and if its introduction into that suit was necessary for a complete and final decision of the right claimed by the plaintiff therein it will be deemed to be a matter which ought to have been made a ground of attack or defence in that suit, unless the matters in that and the subsequent suit are so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion (j). Thus in ill (1) on page 49 the title by heirship could have been made a ground of attack in the alternative in the first suit: it was necessary to do so for the complete and final disposal of all questions as to A's right to the property, and it was not forbidden by any rule of pleading, and further the question in both suits being the same, namely, whether A was entitled to the property or B, the title by survivorship and the title by heirship could not be said to be so dissimilar that their union might lead to confusion. It may appear at first sight that the two matters are dissimilar, for the title by survivorship and the title by heirship have to be supported by different evidence. But the test of evidence which was relied on in some old cases (l) is not a satisfactory test, and though it was advanced in argument in two cases before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council no notice was taken of it in the judgments (l). The reason is when a plaintiff sets up alternative grounds of attack, or when a defendant sets up alternative grounds of defence, the evidence in support of such alternative ground would in most cases be different. But it has been said where the evidence in support of one ground is such as might be destructive of the other ground the two grounds need not be set up in the same suit. The reason given is that the test of determining whether both the grounds ought to have been set up in the same suit is afforded by the provision of O 2, r 1, and the provisions of that rule as to the framing of suits are only to be applied 'as far as practicable' (m)

It is clear that it cannot be said of any matter that it ought to have been set up as a ground of attack in a former suit, if its introduction would have been incongruous to the matter of that suit (n). Thus a person claiming property on the allegation that it is wakf property and that he is the manager thereof is not bound to claim the same property in the same suit alternatively in his own right in the event of its being held that the property was not wakf property. Having asserted that the . . . property was wakf property, [he] could not have consistently claimed the same property as [his] personal property except possibly in an alternative form [He was], however, not under an obligation to adopt the latter course. The mere fact that he could have claimed the property in the alternative as his own property is no ground for saying that he ought to have done so (o). Again Explanation IV does not apply unless the parties are litigating under the same title. Thus if A sues B for a declaration that he is the owner of a certain property he is not bound to plead in the alternative that if he is not the owner he is a permanent tenant. If his suit in the capacity of owner is dismissed and B files a suit against him for possession he may plead in the second suit that he is a permanent tenant and defend the suit in that capacity (p). Where a person who is joined as a defendant in a mortgage suit as being interested in the equity of redemption is entitled to the property by a paramount title, but his title is not disputed in the plaint, he is not bound to set it up as a ground of defence in that suit (q). See note to O 34, r 1, 'Persons having an interest either in the mortgage security or in the right of redemption'.

The decisions bearing on this branch of the subject are numerous. An examination of these decisions leads to the following four Rules.

Rule I—Where the right claimed in both suits is the same, the subsequent suit will be barred as res judicata, though the right in the subsequent suit is sought to be established by a title different from that in the first suit.

The dismissal, however, of a plaintiff's suit for the recovery of land based on an alleged lease is no bar to a subsequent suit for the recovery of the same land on the strength of his general title, the reason given being that the legal relation put forward in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit [see ill (5)].

In the following illustrations it is assumed that the other conditions of res judicata are fulfilled.

Illustrations of Rule I

a gift of the property to his daughter D, and that on D's death S as D's husband, became entitled to the property as D's heir. H alleges that the deed of gift relied upon by S is a forgery. The Court finds that the deed of gift is genuine and the suit is dismissed. H then sues S to recover the same property, alleging that as it has been found that the property belonged to D she is entitled to the property as the heir of her daughter D. The suit is barred as res judicata. Here the right claimed in both the suits is the same, namely, the right to the property in question. In the first suit, it was claimed by H as her husband's heir. In the second suit it is sought to be established by her by a different title, namely, as her daughter's heir. H "might and ought" to have claimed in the alternative as her daughter's heir in the former suit. Having failed to do so, her title, as her daughter's heir, will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in the former suit, and it will also be deemed to have been heard and finally decided against her in that suit. Denofundhoo v. Kristomonee Dowse (1877) 2 Cal 152. The Calcutta decision has been dissented from in Ummatha v. Cherna (1882) 4 Mad 308 but the Madras case falls within the Exception rather than the Rule. See ill (4) below.

3. A lends Rs 50,000 to a Hindu widow on a mortgage of her husband's property. The widow then surrenders the property to B, the reversionary heir of her husband, on B agreeing to pay all her debts. A sues B and the widow to recover Rs 50,000 by sale of the mortgaged property. A also asks for a personal decree against the widow, but he does not ask for a personal decree against B. B is joined as a defendant on the ground that the mortgaged property formed part of the property transferred by the widow to him. The Court finds that the mortgage is not binding upon the husband's estate, and the suit against B is accordingly dismissed. As against the widow, a personal decree is passed for the amount of the loan. A realises Rs 5,000 only from the widow and after her death he sues B for the balance of the money due under the decree (that is to say, A asks for a personal decree against B for the balance) alleging that B was personally liable under the agreement with the widow to pay her debts. The suit is barred as res judicata for A might and ought to have alleged in the former suit that if the mortgage was not binding on the estate, B was at all events personally liable to pay the debt in consequence of the agreement which he (B) had entered into with the widow. Jameswar Pershad v. Rajkumari (1893) 20 Cal 79, 19 I A 234.

Note—Suppose that in the above illustration, A had applied in the first suit for amendment of the plaint by adding a claim for relief against B personally, but the application was refused. In such a case it has been held that the subsequent suit would not be barred. Alagirisami v. Sundareswara (1898) 21 Mad 278. Thakore v. Thakore (1890) 14 Bom 31. But these decisions it is submitted are not correct. Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh (1925) 52 I A 100, 47 All 158 (25) A PC 55.

3A. A in 1896 makes a gift of her property to B who mortgages it to C. C sues for sale on his mortgage and purchases the property himself in 1918. A who is still in pos-is extinguished by her adverse possession for 12 years. The application is refused and the suit dismissed. A continues in possession and in August 1930 C files a suit to recover possession from A. A again pleads adverse possession. A's plea is a valid defence, for although she is debarred from pleading that she had acquired a title by adverse possession in August 1918 it is still open to her to prove that she has acquired title by adverse possession in August 1930. Kiranshahi v. Official Assignee (1933) 60 Cal 8, 143 I C 679, (33) A C 246 (facts simplified).

4. A, alleging that he is the lutima adopted son of B, claims the whole estate of B, and sues for the administration of B's estate. A fails to prove the adoption and the suit is dismissed. A afterwards sues for administration of the same estate claiming one half of the estate as the apatika adopted son of B. The suit is barred as res judicata. Maung Ba Thein v. Ma Jhan Myint (1927) 5 Pang 565 105 I C 586, (28) A.R. 9

5. A sues B to recover certain lands from him alleging that B held the lands under a lease and that the lease had expired. The lease is not proved, and the suit is dismissed. Subsequently A sues B to recover the same land on the strength of his general title. The suit is not barred as res judicata. Zamorin of Calicut v. Narayanan (1899) 22 Mad 323. *Autti Ali v. Rule II—If a matter which forms a ground of attack in the subsequent suit could have been alleged as a ground of defence in the former suit, but was omitted to be so alleged in that suit it will be deemed to have been directly and substantially in issue in that suit within the meaning of Explanation IV

This rule contemplates cases in which the plaintiff in the subsequent suit was defendant in the former suit. Thus a claim which might have been pleaded by way of set off (s) or counter claim (t) to a previous suit will not be barred

The agreement is not proved, and a decree is passed against the mortgagor for Rs. 3 000. The property is sold in execution of the decree, and it is purchased by the mortgagee with the leave of the Court. The mortgagor then sues the mortgagee to have the sale set aside and for a declaration that the mortgage

Rule IV—It cannot be said of a relief which if claimed in the first suit would have made that suit bad for multifariousness that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit (x).

Suits on Mortgage—If a mortgagee in a suit for redemption against him by the mortgagor, omits to obtain an order for sale of the mortgaged property on failure of payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage debt within the time allowed for redemption, he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit for sale in default of payment by the mortgagor within that time. The mortgagee 'might and ought' to have claimed the right of sale in the suit for redemption brought against him (y). So also if the mortgagee omits to ask for a personal decree against the mortgagor, he cannot do so in a subsequent suit on the same mortgage (z), but if he applies for a personal remedy and his claim is not adjudicated upon, he may renew the claim at a later stage of the same proceeding (a).

In a case from Oudh (b) a puisne mortgagee sued to redeem a prior mortgagee and made the prior mortgagee's sub mortgagee a party. The prior mortgagee pleaded that the sub mortgage was fictitious, and a decree for redemption was passed on payment of the amount due on the mortgage to the mortgagee alone. The sub mortgagee then sued the prior mortgagee for a personal decree under s 68 of the Transfer of Property Act. The Court held that the issue as to the genuineness of the sub mortgage was not res judicata as the sub mortgagee's presence in the prior suit was not compulsory and there was no necessity for the sub mortgagee to ask for a personal decree in the former suit. On the other hand a sub mortgagee is a person interested in the mortgage security under O 34, r 1 and in Narayan v Ganoy (c) it was said that in a redemption suit of land which has been sub mortgaged the judgment directs an account of what is due to the original mortgagee and then of what is due to the sub mortgagee.

If a puisne mortgagee sues for sale on his mortgage and makes the prior mortgagee a party without claiming any relief against him, the prior mortgagee is in the position of a holder by title paramount outside the controversy (d). He need not appear in the suit and his rights under the prior mortgage are not affected. But if the puisne mortgagee suing on his mortgage raises any controversy as to the prior mortgage and seeks to sell the property unencumbered, the prior mortgagee, if he omits to plead his prior mortgage, will be debarred from doing so in a subsequent suit (e). On the same principle it has been held that when a person is joined in a redemption suit as heir and legal representative of a deceased mortgagee, he need not set up a claim to a part of the property by title independent of and paramount to the mortgage (f).

If a puisne mortgagee sues to redeem a mesne mortgage and the latter omits to set up a prior mortgage which he has redeemed and to which he is subrogated the rights of subrogation will be lost by res judicata, and if the mesne subsequently sues the puisne mortgagee claiming to be subrogee of the prior mortgage his suit will be barred (g).

If a mortgagee has successive mortgages of the same property from the same person there is a conflict of decisions whether he can obtain an order for sale on one alone. The Bombay High Court has held that if a mortgagee sues on a subsequent mortgage without reference to a prior mortgage he is barred by Explanation IV as he might and ought to have included the prior mortgage in his suit (h). Similarly the Madras High Court has held that a suit on a prior mortgage bars a suit on a subsequent mortgage of the same property (i). But it was held that a mortgagee might sue on a later mortgage reserving his rights on a prior mortgage (j). In Madras there was a conflict of decisions at one time which was set at rest by a decision of the Full Bench in Subramania v Balasubramania (k) which adopted the above view. In doing so the Full Bench followed the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Sundar Singh v Bholu (l) which held that the two mortgages constituted different causes of action. This view is correct and has been generally followed (m). But as it is a hardship on the mortgagor that his property should be sold twice, it is now provided by sec 32 of the Transfer of Property Amendment Act 20 of 1929 that a mortgagee having several mortgages of the same property from the same person must sell all or none. See sec 67A of the Transfer of Property Act.

In suits for redemption, foreclosure or sale, there ought to be a complete and final settlement of all accounts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee right up to the time of actual redemption, foreclosure or sale as the case may be (n). A mortgagor

Rule IV—It cannot be said of a relief which if claimed in the first suit would have made that suit bad for multifariousness that it ought to have been made a ground of attack in that suit (x).

Suits on Mortgage—If a mortgagee in a suit for redemption against him by the mortgagor, omits to obtain an order for sale of the mortgaged property on failure of payment by the mortgagor of the mortgage debt within the time allowed for redemption he will be precluded from bringing a separate suit for sale in default of payment by the mortgagor within that time. The mortgagee might and ought to have claimed the right of sale in the suit for redemption brought against him (y). So also if the mortgagee omits to ask for a personal decree against the mortgagor he cannot do so in a subsequent suit on the same mortgage (z), but if he applies for a personal remedy and his claim is not adjudicated upon he may renew the claim at a later stage of the same proceeding (a).

therefore, who has obtained a decree for redemption against a mortgagee in possession and paid what was due according to the decree, and obtained possession, cannot afterwards sue for profits realized by the mortgagee for a period prior to the delivery of possession. Such profits 'might and ought' to have been taken into account at the time of passing the decree (o). Similarly, where a mortgagor deposits the mortgage money in Court under sec. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and obtains a decree for possession from a usufructuary mortgagee under sec. 62, he cannot subsequently sue for profits realized by the mortgagee from the date of the deposit to the date of the delivery of possession (p). See notes, 'Finality of decree in redemption suit,' on p. 92 below.

Suits for partition.—If in a previous suit for partition some of the properties are left out by mistake or with the consent of the parties, a subsequent suit for partition of those properties is not barred, but it will be barred if they were excluded by the Court from partition after a contest between the parties on the ground that they are incapable of partition (q).

Suit for declaratory decree.—Failure to sue for a declaratory decree in no way bars a claim for substantive relief when it arises (r).

Subject matter may be different.—It is not necessary for Explanation IV to be applicable that both the issue and the subject matter of the two suits should be the same. It is enough if the matters in issue are the same, otherwise in suits for arrears of rent there could be no res judicata at all, for the subject matters of successive suits for arrears of rent are necessarily different (s). See note under the same heading at page 47, supra.

Issue of law.—This section provides that no Court shall try any suit or "issue," etc. Issues are of three kinds (1) issues of fact (2) issues of law, and (3) mixed issues of law and fact. An issue of fact may be res judicata. A mixed issue of law and fact may also be res judicata (t). An issue of law, it has been held, may or may not be res judicata. The law on the subject may be summarized as follows:—

(1) A decision on an issue of law operates as res judicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is the same as that in the first suit (u). It is immaterial that the decision was erroneous in law (v). See ill. (1) below.

(2) There is a conflict of decisions whether, if the causes of action in the two suits are different, an erroneous decision on a question of law operates as res judicata. It has been held in some cases that it does not (w) [ill. (2)], and in some that it does (x).

[il. (3)] The latter view was adopted by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Tarini Charan v. Kedar Nath (y). The judgment proceeded on the broad ground that the correctness or otherwise of a judicial decision has no bearing upon the question, whether it does or does not operate as res judicata. It was also pointed out that it was the identity of the matter directly and substantially in issue that was the test of res judicata and not the identity of the cause of action. It was contended in that case that the law had been altered by judicial decisions since the judgment in the first suit, and reliance was placed upon the judgment of Maclean, C.J., in Alimunnissa v. Shama Charan (z) where it was said: "Cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when judgment is pronounced, and not upon what it was at the date of a previous suit, the law having been altered meantime. It has been conceded that, if the law had been altered meanwhile by statute, the objection [of res judicata] could not prevail: it is difficult to see why it should prevail because the law has been since determined to be otherwise by judicial decisions. Referring to this passage Rankin, C.J., observed in the Full Bench case that the reasoning in Alimunnissa case was erroneous. The learned Judge said: "The legislature, by statute, may alter the rights of parties and when it does so, it makes such provision as it thinks proper to prevent injustice. Courts of law are in no way authorized to alter the rights of parties. They propose, at all events, to ascertain the law, and if the binding character of a decision upon a concrete question as to the terms of a particular holding is to fluctuate with every alteration in the current of authority the Courts will become an instrument for the unsettlement of rights rather than for the ascertainment thereof. The principle relied upon is abhorrent to section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code and to the general intention of the doctrine of res judicata." At the same time the learned Judge observed that when a plea of res judicata is raised with reference to a point of law which concerns questions of jurisdiction (a), or procedure (b), or limitation (c), and in which besides the parties the Courts and the public have an interest, it was at least a question whether special considerations should not apply. In a Bombay case (t) Baker J., after an exhaustive review of the case law expressed entire agreement with the judgment of Rankin C.J. In the Bombay case however the decision was not on a pure point of law. The holder of a Saranjam sought to execute an award decree of 1855 under which he was entitled to a share of the collections made by a junior branch of his family. The defence was that the award had been superseded by a resumption and regrant of the saranjam by Government in 1900. This same defence had been made to an execution application for a share of the collections of previous years and had been disallowed and the Court had then held that the regrant and resumption of the saranjam had not the effect of nullifying the award. This construction of the regrant was held to be a mixed question of fact and law which operated as res judicata. Again when a deed of partition was construed to be an award, the construction was held to be a mixed question of law and fact and to operate as res judicata (e). Tarini Charan's case has been followed by the Madras High Court (el).

(3) There is no doubt, as observed by Rankin, C.J., that if the law is altered by the passing of a new Act after a decision in a case, the decision cannot operate as res judicata. Thus in Lalshmi v. Atal (f) after a preliminary decree for sale had been passed on a mortgage and before a final decree was made, the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act, 1908, was extended to the district in which the property was situate. That Act provided that no that the decision in the previous suit was erroneous. Hellly v Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the decision in the previous suit even if erroneous operated as res judicata: Tarini Charan v Kedar Nath (1929) 56 Cal 723 (28) A C 777. Chandi Prasad v Maharaja Mahendra (1931) 23 All 5, at pp 10-13.

In the cases in which it was held that an erroneous decision on a point of law where the causes of action were different does not operate as res judicata the Courts were influenced by the consideration that they would be perpetuating an injustice for all time if they were to hold that an erroneous decision on a point of law in a former suit was binding upon the parties in a subsequent suit instituted upon a new cause of action. It must, however, be recognized as stated by Mookerjee, J, in Aghore Nath v Kamini Devi (A), that the effect of this is to substitute in the present section the expression 'cause of action' for 'the matter in issue'. In Benlata v Andarolu (1), Naicker, J, took the extreme view that where a decision on a point of law, whether it be on the construction of a document or of a statute or on common law or on customary law once settles a question that arises directly out of conflicting views as to the rights of the parties it is res judicata. A similar opinion was expressed by Shah, J, and Lawrence, J, in Sitaram v Larman (2), and by Das J, in Ramlal v Deodharas Rai (1). To get over the difficulties which might arise from this extreme view, some judges have suggested a distinction between a decision on an abstract question of law, such as a question of limitation, and a decision on a concrete question, such as the construction of a document entered into between the parties to a suit, the latter question being treated as one to which the rule of res judicata applies, and the former as one to which the principle of stare decisis applies (1). It is difficult to see what the principle of stare decisis has to do with the rule of res judicata (m). In Tarini Charan v Kedar Nath (n), Rankin, C J, said that whether a decision was correct or erroneous it had no bearing on the question of res judicata, and that what was res judicata between the parties to a suit was not the reasoning or any principle of law, but the actual decision declaring the rights of the parties.

In this connection it is interesting to note the recent decision of the Privy Council in Broken Hill Proprietary Co v Broken Hill Municipal Council (o). The appeal was from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales. The question for determination was as to the correct method of ascertaining the annual value of a mine for rating purposes for the years 1919, 1920 and 1921. That question turned upon the construction of s 153 (3) of the Local Government Act, 1919, of New South Wales. The company was assessed for the years 1917, 1918 and 1919 by the Council on a particular construction of the section and that construction was upheld by the High Court of Australia. The Council adopted the same method for assessment for the years 1919, 1920 and 1921 and it was upheld by the Supreme Court. The company appealed to the Privy Council. It was contended on behalf of the Council that the question as to the matter of valuation was res judicata, but this contention was overruled and the appeal was allowed. As to the plea of res judicata their Lordships said: "There is, however, no substance in this contention. The decision of the High Court related to a valuation and a liability to a tax in a previous year, and no doubt as regards that year the decision could not be disputed. The present case relates to a new question—namely, the valuation for a different year and the liability for that year. It is not eadem questio, and therefore the principle of res judicata cannot apply." This case shows that according to the English law an erroneous decision on a question at least of the interpretation of a statute does not operate as res judicata If a decision of every question of law were res judicata, a decision that one of several co sharers may alone maintain a suit for rent of the entire holding, though in contravention of the express provisions of s 194 of the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, would operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties so as to preclude the tenant from raising the same defence in that suit, but it has been rightly decided that such a decision has not the effect of res judicata (p)

Estoppel against a statute—Whether or not a finding on a point of law can be res judicata, it is a settled principle that there can be no estoppel against a statute, for estoppel cannot supersede the law of the land (q) Thus in Hoomesh v Barada (r) where a previous rent suit had been decreed at a rate which included illegal cesses the defendant was not precluded from questioning the legality of the claim The Bombay High Court has allowed the plea of res judicata to sanction what is prohibited by law This was in a case (s) where a mortgagor lessee of a portion of a bhag which was inalienable under the Bombay Bhagdari Act 5 of 1862, when sued for rent, was not allowed to plead that the bhag was inalienable, because he had omitted to do so in a previous ex parte rent suit In a more recent case (t) the Allahabad High Court dismissed a suit by a single co sharer for rent because that form of suit was forbidden by section 194 of the Agra Tenancy Act It was objected that the defendants had not raised this plea in previous rent suits and as to this the Court said that 'where the law forbids a certain thing being done in a suit no amount of failure by a defendant in previous suits to plead the positive bar created by legislature will prevent its being taken up in a subsequent suit'

CONDITION II

The same parties or parties under whom any of them claim

This condition is the principle that judgments and decrees bind only parties and privies (u) A privy is a convenient term of English Law to describe a person who claims under a party Latham, J, in a Bombay case (v) classified persons other than parties as (1) privies (2) persons not claiming under parties but represented by them, and (3) strangers A privy who claims under a party is bound for he who takes the advantage must bear the burden—qui sentit commodum debet et sentire onus Persons represented are in fact parties through their representatives—Explanation VI In the absence of fraud an adjudication is binding on the first two classes, for as to strangers the maxim applies that res inter alios acta nocere non debet

Same parties—Parties are persons whose names are on the record at the time of the decision, and he may be a person who has intervened in the suit (u) A party who withdraws or whose name is struck off, ceases to be a party (x) A party who dies during the pendency of the suit but whose name erroneously remains on the record is not a party (y) If the parties are different there is no res judicata (z) Thus A sues B for rent The defence is that C, and not A, is the landlord A fails to prove his title, and the suit is dismissed A then sues B and C for a declaration of his title to the property The suit is not barred for the parties to the two suits are not the same, C not having been a party to the former suit (a) It has been doubted if the Secretary of State can be said to be a party to Land Acquisition proceedings taken by the Collector (b)

the house from K's son who claimed title under K. M urged that the question of title as between her and K was res judicata by reason of the decision in the creditor's suit. The Privy Council held that the conditions of res judicata were established because there was a conflict of interest between M and K for it was only if the house belonged to Amernath that the plaintiff's case could succeed and this question was decided in the plaintiff's favour. Their Lordships observed that it was immaterial that K had not entered an appearance or contested the suit for she was a proper party and had a right to be heard if she so desired. In a case, however, where one defendant actually gave evidence and supported the case of the other defendant, it was held that there was no conflict of interest and no res judicata between the defendants (1).

A Hindu H dies leaving two daughters D1 and D2 and a nephew N. D1 sues D2 and N to recover certain property under an oral will of H. D2 claims the property under a will in writing executed by H. N claims the property as undivided nephew of H. The Court finds that H and N were divided that the will in writing is the valid will, and dismisses D1's suit. Subsequently D2 sues N to recover the property under the written will. N contends that he and H were joint, and that he became entitled to the property by right of survivorship. The question whether H and N were joint is res judicata. That question was directly and substantially in issue in the first suit, and it was necessary to decide it in that suit to adjudicate upon D1's claim, and it was decided against N (2). Another type of cases in which a question between co-defendants may become res judicata is where a suit is brought against two or more defendants, and a will has to be construed by the Court to adjudicate upon the plaintiff's claim which is founded on the will. In such cases the decision with regard to the construction of the will on the rival contentions of the defendants may be res judicata in a subsequent suit by some or one of them against the rest (3), but not if no rival contentions were raised at all (4). A decree for partition is in favour of each party to whom a share is awarded and is res judicata not only as against the plaintiff (5), but as between the (6), co-defendants (6).

Res judicata as between co-plaintiffs.—Next, as to res judicata between co-plaintiffs. As a matter may be res judicata between co-defendants, so it may be res judicata between co-plaintiff subject to the same conditions which apply to the case of co-defendants (7).

Pro forma defendant.—A party may be joined as a defendant in a suit merely because his presence is necessary in order to enable the Court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon the question involved, see O 1, r 10 (2) and sec 32 of the Code of 1882. In such a case no relief is sought against him and the matter in issue in the suit is not in issue between him and any other party, and cannot therefore be res judicata against him. For instance A, claiming to be entitled to possession of a tank as tenant of Y sues B for possession. A is joined as pro forma defendant and no relief is claimed against him. The suit is dismissed on a finding that B is the owner. X then sues B for possession and B contends that the issue of ownership is res judicata. This contention must fail for the issue was decided in the former suit between A and B, and not between A and B for A was only a pro forma defendant (8). Again A sues B for possession of a house and joined C as a party alleging that part of the house had been let to him. The suit is decreed and subsequently B sues C for possession. The decree in the first case between A and B may operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and C, it is necessary to show that C claims under B by a title arising subsequently to the commencement of the first suit. Thus a purchaser, mortgagee, lessee or donee of a property is not estopped by a decree obtained in a suit against the vendor, mortgagor, lessor or donor commenced after the date of the purchase, mortgage, lease or gift (c)

See notes below under the head "Condition III Litigating under the same title"

Representative suit—Explanation VI—This section deals with representative suits, that is, suits instituted by or against a person in his representative, as distinguished from individual character. Suits brought or defended by one or more persons on behalf of themselves and others with the leave of the Court under O 1, r. 8, are common instances of this class. Explanation VI provides that where persons litigate bona fide in respect of a public right or a private right claimed in common for themselves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating. It refers to cases in which a decision in a suit may operate as res judicata against persons not expressly named as parties to the suit as where a suit is instituted by A and B on behalf of themselves and others, or where it is instituted against A and B on behalf of themselves and others. The conditions under which the decision in such a suit may constitute res judicata against the parties not expressly named in the suit are—

- (1) that there must be a right claimed by one or more persons in common for themselves and others not expressly named in the suit,
- (2) that the parties not expressly named in the suit must be interested in such right
- (3) that the litigation must have been conducted bona fide on behalf of all parties interested (d) and
- (4) that if the suit is one under O 1, r. 8 all the conditions of that section have been strictly complied with (e)

Where a person claims a right for himself which happens to be common to him and others, he cannot be said to be litigating on behalf of the others, and the Explanation does not apply (f)

(2) A, alleging that he is the proprietor of a village, sues B, C and D for ejectment. The defence is that A is not the proprietor and that part of the village belongs to B, C and D, and the rest to X, Y and Z. The Court finds that A is not the proprietor, and A's suit is dismissed. A then sues X, Y and Z, and also B, C and D, for a declaration that he is the proprietor of the village and for possession. The question of A's title to the village is res judicata so as to bar the suit against B, C and D, who were parties to the former suit, but it is not res judicata so as to bar the suit against X, Y and Z who were not parties to the former suit. It cannot be said that B, C and D litigated in the former suit in respect of a private right claimed in common for themselves and X, Y and Z. They set up only their own right to a part of the property and as to the rest they alleged that it belonged to X, Y and Z. Jaimangal Deo v. Bed Saran (1911) 33 All. 493, 9 I C. 819.

(3) A files a suit on behalf of himself and other members of his community to establish a right to worship in a temple, but through oversight omits to give notice under O 1, r 8, to the other members of the community. The suit is dismissed but the judgment will not operate as res judicata to bar a subsequent suit by another member of the community to establish the same right: Kumaravelu v. Ramaswami (1933) 60 I. A. 278, 56 Mad. 657, 143 I C. 665, ('33) A. P. C. 183.

The right referred to in this Explanation may either be a public right or a private right. The words "public right" have been added into this Explanation in view of the provisions of sec. 91 below. The right to have a public nuisance abated is a public right. The right of pasturage claimed by custom by the inhabitants of a village over a tract of land or to take water from a spring or well is a private right (g).

In some of the cases that arose under the Code of 1882 the opinion was expressed that the present Explanation, so far as it relates to private right, must be confined to cases where leave to sue has been obtained under sec. 30 of that Code [now O. 1, r. 8 (1)] (h). But the Explanation is not confined to suits under O. 1, r. 8, but extends to include any litigation in which apart from the rule altogether, parties are entitled to represent interested persons other than themselves (i). But if the suit is one under O. 1, r. 8, the Privy Council has held that the provisions of the rule must be strictly complied with otherwise the Explanation will not apply, even though the omission is due to inadvertence and has caused no injury (j). It had previously been held that it was sufficient if the litigation was carried on bona fide on behalf of all others interested. See the under-noted cases (l) which are no longer law. Suits by a Hindu widow or by a manager of a joint Hindu family or by a reversioner in her or his representative character are instances of this class.

Shebat, Larnayan, trustee, administrator, etc—If the parties in the subsequent suit can be said to have been represented by the parties in the former suit, the decision in the former suit will bind the parties in the subsequent suit.

sixty four Sikhs sue for a declaration that the institution is a Sikh Gurudwara. But a shebait, a trustee of a devasnam, a karnam a holder of vatan or saranjam lands, an administrator of the estate of a deceased person a holder of an inam grant, represents each his successor therefore a decree against him will bind his successor (l). If however the trustees of a temple instead of representing the interests of the idol allows a decree to be passed ex parte, the decree will not operate as res judicata in a suit by the succeeding trustee (m). A decree against the karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity binds the members of the tarwad (n). There are certain purposes for which the Official Assignee represents the insolvent (o). When, however, the Official Assignee brings the insolvent's property to sale for the benefit of the creditors he represents the whole body of creditors. When a claim to an attached house was dismissed, and on the insolvency of the judgment debtor the claimant filed a suit to establish his title to the house as against the Official Assignee the suit was not barred by res judicata as the Official Assignee represented not the judgment debtor but the whole body of creditors (p). A benamidar represents the real owner and a decree against the benamidar binds the owner (q).

Joint Hindu family—The question whether the manager of a joint Hindu family represents the other members in a suit affecting the family depends very largely upon the facts of the case. If he was acting in the suit in the interests of the minor members and with the consent of the adult members they all are bound (r). If the cause of action is a wrongful act of the father the son who is not a party is not bound (s). For mortgage suits see note under O 34 r 1.

Hindu widow as reversioners—A decree passed against a Hindu widow as representing the estate of her husband in respect of a debt or other transaction binding on the estate is binding upon the reversioners (t) unless as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the Shiranganga case, it could be shown that there had not been a fair trial of the right in that suit—or in other words unless that decree could have been successfully impeached on some special ground (u). The reason of this qualification is that though a Hindu widow represents the estate of the reversioners for some purposes it is her duty not only to represent the estate but also to protect it (v). The observations of their Lordships in the Shiranganga case were construed in many cases to mean, that a decree passed against a Hindu widow or other limited heir did not bind the reversioners unless the decree was passed in a suit contested to the end and that neither a consent decree nor a decree on an award, however bona fide the compromise or reference might be, bound the reversioners. But this view has now been definitely rejected by the Privy Council as it involves very extreme consequences, one of them being that a Hindu widow must fight the case up to the Privy Council, and another that her opponent can never suggest a compromise because he would know that any compromise would be upset. The rule of law as now established is that a widow has power to compromise a suit, and a decree passed against her, though on a compromise or on an award, binds the reversioners as much as a decree in a suit contested to the end, provided the compromise was entered into by her bona fide for the benefit of the estate which she represents and not for her personal advantage (w). A decree, however, against a Hindu widow not in her representative but personal character, does not bind the reversioners (x). A decree passed against the legal personal representative of a Hindu widow in respect of her husband's estate does not bind the reversioners, for the representative of a widow does not represent the estate of the husband (y).

There is no authority for the proposition that a Hindu widow, otherwise qualified to represent an estate in litigation, ceases to be so qualified merely owing to a personal disability or disadvantage as a litigant although the merits of a suit by or against her are tried and the trial is fair and honest. The mere fact, therefore, that she is personally estopped from denying the material facts of a case is no ground for withholding the application of the rule enunciated at the commencement of this paragraph, namely, that where the estate of a deceased Hindu has vested in his widow or other limited heirs a decree fairly and properly obtained against her is binding on the reversionary heirs. Thus where a Hindu widow instituted a suit for a declaration that an adoption made by her to her deceased husband was invalid, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that the widow was estopped by her conduct from denying the validity of the adoption and it was further found upon the facts that the adoption was valid, it was held in a suit brought by the reversionary heir after the widow's death for a declaration that the adoption was invalid, that the reversionary heir was bound by the decision in the first suit as res judicata (z). The dismissal of a suit brought by a widow on the ground that it was barred by the provisions of sec 47 below, does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit by the reversioners (a).

A suit by the next reversioner for a declaration that an alienation made by a Hindu widow is not binding on the reversion is a representative suit on behalf of all the reversioners (b). A decree fairly and properly obtained against the reversioner in such a suit is binding not only upon him, but the whole body of reversioners presumptive and contingent on the one hand and the alienee or his representative on the other (c).

Consent decree in a representative suit on behalf of the public.—In the under-mentioned case (d) the Privy Council left it an open question whether in India persons instituting a suit on behalf of the public can bind the public by a compromise decree

Judgment in rem.—As already explained a judgment in a suit is binding only upon the parties to the suit and their privies. "As a general principle, a transaction between two parties, in judicial proceedings, ought not to be binding upon a third, for it would be unjust to bind any person who could not be admitted to make a defence, or to examine witnesses, or to appeal from a judgment he might think erroneous" (e). There are however, certain judgments which bind all the world and not only the parties to the proceeding in which they were passed and their privies. A judgment that is binding upon the parties and their privies only is called a judgment in personam. A judgment which binds all the world is called a judgment in rem. Judgments in rem are outside the scope of the present section. They are dealt with in the Indian Evidence Act sec 41.

Decree against minor.—A decree passed against a minor properly represented is binding upon him to the same extent as a decree passed against an adult. A minor, however, is entitled to impeach a decree passed against him if the next friend or guardian for the suit is guilty of fraud or gross negligence in allowing the decree to be passed (f). It has been said in one case that any act or omission on the part of the guardian ad litem which in the result has wrought prejudice to the minor's interest is gross negligence (g). But in another case (h) the Court said: "It is not every kind of negligence that would be a sufficient ground for setting aside a decree or for declaring that the proceedings in Court are null and void, but where the guardian omits to do his plain duty and where by reason of such negligence a suit is decided against a minor, which would not have been otherwise decreed against him it must be held that the guardian's negligence contributed to the Court proceeding in the manner it did." An omission on the part of a guardian ad litem to bring to the notice of the Court a previous judgment between the parties for the purpose of raising the plea of res judicata has been held not to constitute negligence (i).

A decree passed against a minor not properly represented is a nullity and cannot operate as res judicata (j). But it has been held that if a suit is brought on the minor's behalf to set aside a sale in execution of such decree, but the plea that the minor was not properly represented in the suit in which the decree was passed is not then taken, it cannot be taken in a subsequent suit to set aside the decree and sale by reason of the rule contained in Explanation IV to the section (k).

Litigating under the same title.—The third condition of res judicata is that the parties in the subsequent suit must have litigated under the same title in the former suit. in fact, is a different person in law' (l) Thus where a suit is brought by a person to recover possession from a stranger of math property claiming it as the heir of a deceased mohunt, but the suit is dismissed on his failure to produce a certificate of succession to establish his heirship, the dismissal is no bar to a suit by him as manager of the math on behalf of the math (m) Where the trustees of a public charity fail in a suit to eject a trespasser, they are not barred from suing again as members of the public with the consent of the Advocate General (n) The dismissal of a suit by A against B, C and D in their individual capacity on a finding that a temple is public property does not operate as res judicata against A in a subsequent suit brought by B, C, D and others in their representative capacity against A for a declaration that the same temple is public property (o) Similarly the dismissal of a suit brought by a son against his father for maintenance claimed under an agreement is no bar to a suit by him against his eldest brother for a declaration that he is entitled to maintenance out of certain lands in his hands held under a grant from Government whereby, it was alleged, the lands were charged at the time of grant with the maintenance of the junior members of the family (p) Where in a suit by A against B for the recovery of a property, B sets up a jus tertii in C and the Court finds that C has no title to the property, and allows A's claim, the finding does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit by B after C's death against A, claiming the same property as the heir of C, as it could not have operated as such against C himself (q) A judgment against a party will not operate as res judicata when he subsequently acquires a fresh title under sec 43 of the Transfer of Property Act (r)

A mortgagee in possession does not lose the character of mortgagee and become a trespasser because he refuses to deliver up possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor on deposit being made by the latter in Court of the amount payable on the mortgage A executes a usufructuary mortgage of his property to B, and places B in possession thereof At the proper time A tenders the mortgage debt, Rs 500, to B and asks to be restored to possession B refuses to accept the tender on the ground that more is due to him and to deliver up possession of the property to A A sues B for redemption, and deposits Rs 500 in Court The Court finds that the tender was proper, and directs B to deliver up possession to A After entering into possession, A sues B to recover mesne profits from B from the date of the deposit in Court to the date of the recovery of possession The suit is barred, for A "might and ought" to have claimed the mesne profits in the first suit The suit is between the same parties litigating "under the same title," that is, as mortgagor and mortgagee The mortgage is not extinguished after the tender and deposit, and B does not become a trespasser after that date It cannot therefore be said that the suit against B for mesne profits is against him as a trespasser, and not as a mortgagee (s)

The words 'between parties under whom they or any of them claim litigating under the same title' cover a case where the later litigant occupies by succession the same position as the former litigant There may be a succession by the ordinary rules of inheritance or succession by some very special rules as in the case of saranjam estates or vatan estates The words of the section do not make any distinction between different

Here the Court which decided the former suit was not a Court of jurisdiction concurrent with that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought—In such a case the Court which decided the former suit cannot be a Court 'competent to try the subsequent suit' within the meaning of this section (b)

Here the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of concurrent jurisdiction—In such a case the Court which decided the former suit might or might not have been "competent to try the subsequent suit" If it was, the decision would operate as res judicata, but not otherwise

Summarising the above, we may say that in order that a decision in a former suit may operate as res judicata, the Court which decided that suit must have been either—

- 1 a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, or
- 2 a Court of concurrent jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit

The following are the principal rules as to concurrent jurisdiction—

(1) The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter—This rule was laid down by Sir Barnes Peacock in Edun v. Bechun (c) and it was approved by the Privy Council in Misir v. Sheo Baksh (d). The learned Chief Justice said that there were in India many grades of Courts with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction presided over by judges whose qualification differed widely, that it would be improper that a finding as to the validity of an adoption or of a will in a petty suit in a Munsiff's Court should be conclusive in a suit for a property of a large amount in a High Court, and that by taking concurrent jurisdiction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter, this evil or inconvenience is avoided. In Run Bahadur v. Luchu Koer (e) the Privy Council said that 'if this construction of the law were not adopted, the lowest Court in India might determine finally and without appeal to the High Court, the title to the greatest estate in the Indian empire'. It is essential therefore that the first Court was a Court competent to try and decide not only the particular matter in issue but also the subsequent suit in which the issue is subsequently raised (f).

First, as to pecuniary limit—The jurisdiction of the Court which decided the former suit, and that of the Court in which the subsequent suit is brought, must be concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit. A sues B in Court X to recover interest due on a bond for Rs 12 000. For the defence it is alleged that the amount actually lent by A was Rs 4 000 and that A was not entitled to interest on more than Rs 4 000. The Court finds that the amount actually lent was Rs 4 000 and awards A interest on that sum only. Court X is a Court of which the jurisdiction is limited to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 5 000. A then sues B in a High Court to recover the principal sum of Rs 12 000 alleging that that was the actual amount lent by him to B. B contends that the actual amount advanced was Rs 4 000 and that the question as to whether Rs 12 000 was lent or Rs 4 000 is res judicata. The question is not res judicata, for the jurisdiction of Court X being limited to Rs 5 000 it was not a Court competent to try the subsequent suit in which the amount claimed is Rs 12 000. Pecuniary jurisdiction is determined by the plaintiff's estimate of the value of his claim and if the Court awards less that does now show that the suit was brought in the wrong Court (g). But the plaintiff cannot prevent a decision in a previous suit from operating as res judicata by overvaluing the second suit (k). Where A brought two suits in a Provincial Small Cause Court for compensation in each suit for loss of one parcel, and the suits were dismissed, and he subsequently brought a suit in the Munsiff's Court, joining together the claims in the respect of both the parcels so as to bring the valuation above the Rs. 500 limit, it was held that the suit was barred on the principle of res judicata (i). If a suit as to one parcel is dismissed in a Munsiff's Court, and then a suit is subsequently brought between the same parties on the same cause of action as to that parcel and several other parcels in the Court of the Subordinate Judge the second suit as to that one parcel will be barred by res judicata (j).

Secondly, as to subject matter—The jurisdiction of the two Courts must be concurrent as regards subject matter. Thus certain Courts have no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title, though that question may be gone into incidentally in order to decide the principal question. A finding on a question of title by such Courts cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit on title. This generally happens in the three following cases—

(a) Where the first Court is a "Munsiff's Court" and the second Court a "District Court"—A sues B for rent in a Munsiff's Court. The defence is that C and not A is the landlord. The Court finds that A is not the landlord, and the suit is dismissed. A then sues B in a District Court for a declaration of title to the land. The suit is not barred, for a Munsiff's Court has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon questions of title (l). A decision of a District Munsiff's Court in a suit for possession will not operate as res judicata in a suit for redemption of a mortgage, for a District Munsiff's Court is not competent to try a mortgage suit (kl).

(b) Where the first Court is a Provincial Small Cause Court—A decision in a suit for damages instituted in a Provincial Small Cause Court (a Court not competent to try a suit on title) does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for establishment of title (i) and thus is also the case when the Small Cause Court decree is based on an arbitrator's award (m). A decision in a suit for rent in a Provincial Small Cause Court [a Court not competent to try a suit for possession] does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession (n).

(c) Where the first Court is a "Revenue Court" and the second Court is a "Civil Court"—A decision of a Revenue Court on a question of title is no bar to the trial of the same question by the ordinary Civil Courts, unless the Revenue Court is empowered by the Legislature to determine questions of title so as to constitute it pro tanto a Civil Court (o). The reason is that Courts of Revenue are generally Courts of jurisdiction limited to adjudicate upon questions of rent, tenure, etc. (p). There are, however, some matters of which the decision by a Revenue Court is expressly declared by the Act constituting the Court to have the force of a decree in a civil suit (q), and some as to which it is declared that the decision shall be final (r) In such cases, the decision of a Revenue Court will operate as res judicata so as to bar the trial of the same matter in a Civil Court When the Revenue Act bars suits claiming an alteration of shares made on a partition by a Revenue Court a party to such a partition cannot sue in a Civil Court for an enhanced share (s), but if on a revenue partition one mahal has been allotted to several co sharers jointly, a suit to declare the rights of such co sharers inter se is not barred for it in no way interferes with the revenue partition (t) But when a partition made by a Revenue Court has assigned to the plaintiff lands as under proprietor a suit for a declaration that he is a superior proprietor is barred (u) In a case under the Agra Tenancy Act, 1901, (z), an occupancy tenant sued in a Revenue Court to evict the defendant alleging that he was a sub tenant The suit was dismissed on the ground that the defendant was not a sub tenant but probably a sharer in the occupancy. The plaintiff then sued in the Civil Court to eject the defendant as a trespasser, but the suit was dismissed on the ground that its object was to reverse the decision of the Revenue Court This decision, it is submitted, is incorrect. The finding of the Revenue Court that the defendant was not a sub tenant was final But it had no such jurisdiction to declare who were sharers in the occupancy, and in any event its finding on that point was only incidental. See notes "Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of exclusive jurisdiction," on p 72 above For other cases see foot note (w) See note "Where the Court which decided the former suit was a Court of exclusive jurisdiction," on p 72 above.

(2) When the first Court is a "Criminal Court" and the second Court is a 'Civil Court'—Criminal proceedings are not a 'suit' hence no finding of a Criminal Court can be res judicata in a subsequent suit. It has thus been held that a conviction or an acquittal in a criminal case is not conclusive in a civil suit for damages in respect of the act charged against the accused (x). On this principle the finding of a Criminal Court that A assaulted or abducted B is not res judicata in a suit for damages against A for assault or abduction (y); nor is an acquittal a bar to a civil suit against the accused (z).

The High Court of Bombay had held that the judgment of a Civil Court may in a proper case be admissible in evidence in a criminal proceeding between the same parties. Thus where A charged B with criminal breach of trust in respect of certain items, and it appeared that all those items had been dealt with by the Civil Court and the contentions of the accused with reference to all of them had been found to be correct by that Court, it was held that the judgment of the Civil Court was admissible in evidence in the criminal proceedings against the accused (a)

(3) To determine whether the Court which decided the former suit had jurisdiction to try the subsequent suit, regard must be had to the jurisdiction of that Court at the date of the

- (3) that when a Court merely for the purpose of preventing a remand records its finding on an issue not necessary for the decision of the case, it does not operate as res judicata (c)

See notes "Examination of pleadings and judgment, on p 42 above

A matter will be said to have been "heard and finally decided," notwithstanding that the former suit was disposed of in any of the following ways —

- (i) ex parte (d), or
- (ii) by dismissal under O 17, r 3 (c), or
- (iii) by a decree on an award (f) or
- (iv) by oath tendered under s 8 of the Indian Oaths Act, 1873 (g),
- (v) by dismissal owing to plaintiff's failure to adduce evidence at the hearing (h)

The decision in the former suit must have been one on the merits — In order that a matter may be said to have been heard and finally decided, the decision in the former suit must have been one on the merits. Hence it could not be said of a matter that it was "heard and finally decided," if the former suit was dismissed —

- (i) for want of jurisdiction (i), or
- (ii) for default of plaintiff's appearance under O 9, r 8 (j), [but a fresh suit on the same cause of action may be barred under O 9, r 9], or

- (iv) for failure on the part of the plaintiff to produce probate or letters of administration or succession certificate when the same is required by law to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (p) or
- (v) for failure to furnish security for costs under O 25, r 2 (q), or not liable to be evicted. The finding in the first suit that the land was not majhes land does not operate as res judicata so as to preclude B from raising the same contention in the subsequent suit, the reason being that in a suit having been dismissed, B could not have appealed from the finding that the land was not majhes land. The Court having found in the first suit that A had not given notice to quit it was not necessary for the determination of the suit to decide whether the land was majhes land or not. The first suit was dismissed in spite of the finding in its favour that the land was not majhes land. Thakur Magundeo v Thakur Mahadeo (1891) 18 Cal 647, Sundo v Bidhoo (1880) 13 Cal 17.

Suppose that in the above illustration B had not raised the defence that the land was majhes land in the first suit. Would he be precluded from raising that defence in the second suit on the ground that he might and ought to have raised that defence in the first suit? No. The reason being that when a point of defence that has been actually raised and disallowed cannot operate as res judicata against a defendant, it certainly cannot operate as such when it has not been raised at all though it might and ought to have been raised (b).

(2) A sues B for possession of certain lands after the expiry of a lease granted by him to B. B pleads (1) an occupancy right, and (2) that the suit is premature as he (B) had a right of renewal. The trial judge finds that there was no occupancy right, but that the suit was premature and the suit is dismissed. A files an appeal to the High Court. B files a cross objection to the finding against him, namely that he had no occupancy right. The High Court affirms the decree on the ground that the suit was premature and upon the cross objection affirms the finding that B had no occupancy right. After some years A, after giving notice to B, again sues B for possession. B again pleads an occupancy right. A contends that the finding of the High Court in the previous suit that B had no occupancy right is res judicata. Held by the Judicial Committee that the finding is not res judicata the reason being that B having succeeded on the plea that the suit was premature he had no occasion to go further as to the finding against him. Midnapur Zamindari Co., Ltd v Naresh Narayan Roy (1921) 48 I A 49 48 Cal 460 64 I C 231, (22) A PC 241. The decision to the contrary in Mota v Uthai (1916) 40 Bom 662, 36 I C 74, is not good law.

(3) In a suit by A against B for damages for not removing filth from A's land B contends (1) that no notice was given as required by the Bengal Municipal Act, and (2) that he was not bound to remove the filth. The suit is dismissed upon two grounds, namely, that no notice was given as required by the Act, and that B was not bound to remove the filth. A then sues B for damages for not removing filth during a subsequent period after giving notice to B. B contends that he is not liable to remove the filth, and that the question of his liability is res judicata by reason of its having been decided against him in the first suit. A contends that the question is not res judicata for the Court having decided in the former suit that the suit must fail for want of notice it was not necessary for the Court to decide the issue as to B's liability to remove the filth. Held by the Calcutta High Court that the question is res judicata and A cannot raise it again in the second suit. Peary v Ambica (1897) 24 Cal 900, Mahomed Ismail v Sharfutullah (1930) 57 Cal 872, 129 I C 310 (30) A C 810. A, alleging that he is the adopted son of X, sues B to recover certain property granted to him by X under a deed and forming part of the estate of X. The Court finds that A is not the adopted son of X, but that he is entitled to the property under the deed and a decree is passed for A. The finding that A is not the adopted son of X will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between A and B in which the question of adoption is again put in issue, for the decree being in favour of A, A could not have appealed from that finding. The Court having found that A was entitled to the property under the deed, the finding on the question of adoption was not necessary to the determination of the suit. The decree, far from being based on the finding as to adoption, was made in spite of it. Rango v Mudiyappa (1839) 23 Bom 296

Finality of decree in redemption suits—If the mortgagor files a suit for redemption and no order for foreclosure extinguishing the right of redemption in default of payment is made the preliminary decree for redemption does not have that effect. The right of redemption continues until a decree absolute for foreclosure is passed (e), or the sale is confirmed (f). In such a case there is a conflict of decisions as to whether the mortgagor can enforce his right of redemption by a second suit, after a preliminary decree on which no further proceedings have been taken. According to Allahabad, Bombay, and Lahore decisions he can (g), on the other hand, according to Calcutta and Madras decisions he cannot (h). But though according to the Allahabad and Bombay High Courts a second suit for redemption is not barred, the same High Courts have held that any matter decided in the earlier suit, e.g., the amount of the mortgage debt, cannot be re-opened in the subsequent suit (i).

In the converse case of the mortgagee not taking further proceedings on his decree

Where a decree is appealed from, it is the appellate decree that must be looked to determine the question of res judicata, and not the decree appealed from—A decision liable to appeal may be "final" within the meaning of this section until the appeal is preferred. But once the appeal is filed the decision loses its character of 'finality,' and what was once res judicata again becomes res sub judice, that is, matter under judicial inquiry. With reference to s 207 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code which is in pari materia with this section the Privy Council said: 'Where an appeal lies the finality of the decree on such appeal being taken, is qualified by the appeal and the decree is not final in the sense that it will form res judicata' as between the parties. In this case (l) A in 1921 sued B on an account and obtained a decree on the 17th January 1927. B filed an appeal on the 19th January 1927 and A to avoid a possible bar of limitation filed a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the 2nd June 1927. The suit was dismissed as res judicata although B's appeal in the first suit was pending. The Privy Council reversed this decision and said that the proper course was to have stayed the second suit pending the decision of the appeal in the first suit. The appeal destroys the finality of the decision, the decree of the lower Court is superseded by the decree of the appellate Court, and it is the latter decree that should be looked to to determine the question of res judicata (m). In an Allahabad case (n) the Court passed a decree for costs and in an application for execution this decree was construed as not making the defendant personally liable. Subsequently the decree was confirmed by the Court of Appeal. In a second execution application of the decree of the appellate Court the construction of the decree in the first application did not operate as res judicata.

A sues B for damages for cutting and removing trees from his land. The suit is dismissed on the grounds (1) that the land did not belong to A, and (2) that B did not cut the trees. A appeals from the decree on both these grounds, but the appeal is dismissed on the ground that A had failed to prove that B had cut the trees. Note that the appellate Court does not decide the question of A's title. A then sues B for possession of the land claiming that the land belongs to him. B contends that the suit is barred as res judicata as the first Court had found in the former suit that the land did not belong to A. The suit is not barred for the question of A's title became res sub judice when the appeal was preferred and it did not become res judicata as the appellate Court did not adjudicate upon the question. But a judgment of an appellate Court will operate as res judicata as regards all findings of the lower Court which, though not referred to in it, are adopted by a decree which grants a relief that is possible only on such findings (o). An issue again is res judicata where the judgment of the appellate Court shows that the issue was treated as material and was decided although the decree passed merely affirms the decree of the lower Court which did not deal with the issue (p).

The Rangoon High Court has held that a decree may be final as regards a party A who has not appealed although another party B has appealed if A has not been made a party by B in his appeal. The mere possibility that the appellate Court might make A a party and proceed under O 41, r 33, does not make it less final (q).

If only a part of a decree is appealed from the rest of the decree may become final and operate as res judicata.—The defendant had obtained a decree on a mortgage. The plaintiff who had paid off a prior mortgage filed a suit claiming to be subrogated to the prior mortgagee and to recover the amount he had paid from the defendant. The original Court found that the plaintiff was subrogated and awarded him the principal sum he had paid with interest. The defendant on appeal claimed that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest. The defendant could not on second appeal dispute plaintiff's right of subrogation which was res judicata by reason of the decree of the original Court, this part of which had not been appealed against (r).

Consent decree and estoppel—The present section does not apply in terms to consent decrees, for it cannot be said in the case of such decrees that the matters in issue between the parties "have been heard and finally decided" within the meaning of this section (a). A consent decree, however, has to all intents and purposes the same effect as res judicata as a decree passed in iudicio (i). It raises an estoppel as much as a decree passed in iudicio (u). So long, therefore, as a consent decree stands, it is not open to either party thereto to give it the go by, even if it contains clauses that are bad in law (i). A consent decree, however, is a mere creature of the agreement on which it is founded, and it may be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties (w). But unless all the parties agree, an application cannot be made to the Court of first instance in the original suit to set aside the decree (x). Though it may be done in the case of an interlocutory order (y). See notes to s. 96, Procedure for setting aside consent decree."

Explanation V Relief claimed but not expressly granted—If a relief is claimed in a suit but is not expressly granted in the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused, and the matter in respect of which the relief is claimed will be res judicata. Thus where in a suit by a mortgagee (1) for a money decree, and (2) in default of payment for sale of the mortgaged property, the mortgagee was content to take a money-decree only, it was held that a subsequent suit by him, on failure of the mortgagor to satisfy the decree, to have the amount of the mortgage debt paid to him by the sale of the property, was barred as res judicata. The relief as to sale having been claimed by the mortgagee, but not having been expressly granted in the former suit, must be deemed to have been refused so as to bar the subsequent suit (z).

Liberty to bring a fresh suit—Where a former suit between the same parties in the same Court and for the same relief results in a decree of dismissal, but the judgment leaves it open to the plaintiff to bring a fresh suit and leaves "open untouched and undecided all matters" affecting the rights of the parties, the decree does not constitute res judicata, as such matters cannot be said to have been "heard and finally decided" within the meaning of this section (a). But if the Court has in the particular circumstances of a case no power to reserve liberty to a party to bring a fresh suit, the subsequent suit may be barred as res judicata notwithstanding the liberty to bring a fresh suit. Thus in Hatson v. Collector of Rajshahye (b) the former suit was dismissed for the plaintiff's failure to produce evidence but a direction was given that the plaintiff could institute a fresh proceeding as if no suit had been brought. Nevertheless the Privy Council held that the subsequent suit was barred by res judicata for the reservation was of no effect.

The expression former suit does not exclude the application of the rule when suits are tried together. See note Suits tried together—One judgment at pp 39 40 above.

The rule of res judicata has been extended beyond the limits of the section in the case of proceedings in a Probate Court and in the case of execution proceedings and interlocutory orders in the same suit.

Probate proceedings—When a question of the relationship of parties has been decided in a probate proceeding a subsequent suit between the same parties involving the same question is barred by the rule of res judicata although the words of the section are not strictly applicable. This was decided by the Privy Council in the case of Kali pada v. Dityapada (1) confirming a decision of the Calcutta High Court (u) and approving that Court's dissent from previous decisions to the contrary (v). The undernoted cases (w) though not expressly mentioned must be treated as overruled. Any order passed after contention in a probate proceeding is res judicata in any subsequent proceeding against the caveators who contested it (x). In a Bombay case (y) A, alleging himself to be the executor of B's will applied for probate of the will but C, B's widow, opposed the application and probate was refused on the ground that the will was not proved. C then sued A to recover her husband's property and A was precluded from contending that he was entitled to possession as B's executor. The Court observed that though the judgment of the Probate Court refusing probate to A does not operate as a judgment in rem yet it operates as res judicata between A and C under s 83 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881 (now replaced by s 29 of Indian Succession Act, 1925) read with s 11 of the Code.

A decision on a question of relationship in a proceeding on an application for letters of administration after trial of an issue is binding as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties (z).

Orders in execution proceedings—The leading case on the application of res judicata to interlocutory orders and to execution proceedings is Ram Airpal v. Rup Kuari (a), decided by the Judicial Committee in 1883. The principle of that decision is that s 11 is not exhaustive and that the principle of res judicata still remains apart from the limited provisions of the Code. Prior to that decision the Courts in India generally held that sec 13 of the Code of 1882 (corresponding with the present section) was not applicable to execution proceedings. The Judicial Committee held that though the section in terms did not apply to execution proceedings the principle of res judicata applied to such proceedings. The question in that case was whether a decision in the course of execution proceedings, that the decree which according to its true construction awarded future mesne profits, operated as res judicata so as to preclude the Court from trying the question over again at a subsequent stage of the proceedings. The High Court of Allahabad held that it did not. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it did. Their Lordships said—

The matter decided by Mr Probyn was not decided in a former suit, but in a proceeding of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation. It was as binding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties.

in every proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is binding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. The binding force of such a judgment depends not upon sec 13, Act X of 1877 [s. 11 of the present Code] but upon general principles of law. If it were not binding there would be no end to litigation. The parties were bound by the decision of Mr. Probhn who, whether right or wrong, had decided that it did [that is that the decree awarded future mesne profits], a decision which, not having been appealed, was final and binding upon the parties and those claiming under them."

The ratio decidendi of Pam Karpal a case is that if a particular construction is put on a decree in proceedings on a former application for execution, it is not competent to the Court to treat that construction as erroneous and put another construction on it at a subsequent stage of the execution proceedings (b). Parties cannot raise a second time in the same suit or execution proceeding an issue that has already been determined (c). Thus the Judicial Committee held in Mungul Pershad v. Gria Kant (d), that a decision on an application for execution after hearing both the parties that the application is not barred by the law of limitation though erroneous is binding on the parties in subsequent proceedings in execution. Their Lordships said: "The order was made by a Court having competent jurisdiction to try and determine whether the decree was barred by limitation. No appeal was preferred against it. Admitting for the sake of valid, not is barred by limitation though erroneous is conclusive between the parties and the question cannot be re-tried on a subsequent application for execution (e).

The principle laid down in Ram Karpal a case referred to above is that when a question has been raised in an execution proceeding and decided, the decision, even if erroneous, is binding on the parties and the same question cannot be re-tried in a subsequent proceeding in execution, in other words, that the principle of res judicata is applicable to proceedings in execution. This principle has been followed by the High Courts of India (f). But this principle does not apply unless the parties to the subsequent proceeding were also parties to the former proceeding (g) and had litigated under the same title (h). Nor does it apply unless the former application was heard and decided. Hence an order dismissing an application for execution for default of appearance (i) or allowing it to be struck off for the present (j) or allowing it to be withdrawn with liberty to present a fresh application (k) is no bar to a fresh application for execution. Similarly where an application for execution under O 21, r 32, is dismissed on the ground that the decree holder had not given the judgment-debtor an opportunity of obeying it, a second application for execution after such opportunity had been given is not barred as res judicata (l) Further, the decision in the former application must have been necessary for the determination of the application. Thus if A applies for execution, and B pleads limitation, and neither party appearing on the date fixed for the hearing of the objection, A's application is dismissed and B's objection is disallowed, B is not precluded from raising the plea of limitation on a fresh application for execution made by A, the reason being that A's application being dismissed for default, it was not necessary for the Court to decide the question of limitation (m)

Where an assignee of a decree applied for execution under O. 21, r. 16 and the judgment debtor took no objection to the validity of the decree it was held that he was not debarred on the principle of Explanation IV from impeaching the validity of the decree in a subsequent suit (n). But the principle of Explanation IV has been applied to a subsequent stage of the execution proceeding. Thus if the judgment debtor being entitled and having an opportunity to raise a plea in bar of execution e.g., a plea of limitation fails to do so and execution is ordered, he will be precluded from raising the same plea at a subsequent stage of the execution proceeding (o). Thus where A applies for execution of a decree against B and an order is made directing execution to issue, B cannot in a subsequent application for execution raise the plea that the first application for execution was barred by limitation (p). Again when a judgment-debtor objected in an execution proceeding that an attachment was not legal and proper, only because the decree was declaratory, it was not open to him to object to the sale on the ground that the property was not liable under sec. 60 to attachment and sale (q). If the decree has been executed on previous applications the judgment debtor cannot in a subsequent application object that the decree is merely declaratory (r). In one case the Allahabad Court held that the principle of Explanation IV does not apply to a case where a judgment-debtor omits to object to the amount erroneously set forth in the application for execution, and that he is entitled to raise the objection at a later stage of the execution proceedings (s). This decision however, may be supported on the ground that the Court had inherent power to rectify the error. The undermentioned cases (t) contain application has been dismissed for default and there has been no adjudication on the merits the dismissal will not operate as res judicata (g)

Application for review—Where an application is made for a review of judgment and the application is refused, it does not operate as res judicata so as to bar a subsequent suit for the same relief and on the same grounds as those put forward in the application for review. Neither sec 11 nor any doctrine of constructive res judicata can rightly be applied to such a case (h)

Waiver of plea of res judicata—The plea of res judicata is not one which affects the jurisdiction of the Court. It is a plea in bar which a party may waive. If a party does not raise the plea of res judicata, it will be deemed to be a matter directly and substantially in issue and decided against him (i) observations to the effect that Explanation IV should not be extended to execution proceedings and that an order made in execution proceedings should not have the force of res judicata unless the point raised in the subsequent proceedings was actually raised in the former proceedings and decided. But these observations are obiter. And so are the observations in a Madras case that Explanation V does not apply to proceedings in execution (u).

Ex parte orders—An ex parte order in execution proceedings passed after issue of notice and after the Court is satisfied that the notice was served is on general principles binding as res judicata (v). But the order will not have the force of res judicata if no notice is issued (w) or if the notice is not duly served (x) or if the notice does not clearly specify the nature of the claim (y).

Consent orders—An order made by consent of parties in an execution proceeding is as binding on the parties as an order after a contentious trial (z).

Interlocutory orders—In Ram Harpal v Rup Kaur (a) the Privy Council said that upon general principles of law an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in every proceeding in that suit. A decision in an administration suit as to the validity of a gift will be res judicata in a subsequent proceeding in the same suit (b). In a Lahore case (c) the Court ordered an agreement to refer to arbitration to be filed under para 17 of Schedule II. A party applied that the reference should be cancelled as the Court had no jurisdiction. The Court decided that it had jurisdiction and dismissed the application. The party was debarred from raising the same point as an objection to the award.

Again in Louis Dreyfus v Trunachala (d) an order was made on the 20th July 1922 setting aside an award, under the Arbitration Act 1899 made between D and A and remitting the matter back to an umpire. A appealed from the order but the appeal was ultimately dismissed by the Privy Council. After a fresh award was made by the umpire A objected that he was not bound by the submission to arbitration. The Privy Council said: 'Under the order of 20th July 1922 the appeal from which to His Majesty in Council was dismissed the matter was remitted to the umpire. This could have been done only upon the footing that the respondent (A) was bound by a submission to arbitration. Their Lordships accordingly held that the question as to the umpire's jurisdiction over the parties was res judicata.'

Insolvency proceedings—When an Official Receiver dismissed an application under sec 54 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, holding that a sale was not a fraudulent preference, a creditor was debarred by the rule of res judicata from applying under secs 4 and 56 of the Act to set aside a sale as being in fraud of creditors (e).

Application for amendment of decree—Though an application for amendment of a decree is not a suit within the meaning of this section yet if such an application is heard and finally decided it will debar a subsequent application for the same purpose upon general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata (f). If the

It was at one time doubtful whether a suit could be maintained in British India upon the judgment of a Court of a Native State in India or whether the plaintiff could sue only upon the original cause of action. The Madras High Court held that a suit could be maintained on the judgment (r). The Bombay High Court held that no such suit was maintainable (s), and that the only remedy was by way of suit on the original cause of action. The general rule is that a Court which entertains a suit on a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the merits of the original claim or the propriety of the decision (t). The Bombay High Court was apprehensive that a suit on the judgment of a Native State Court might lead to miscarriage of justice, as judicial inquiries in Native States are not ordinarily conducted with intelligence and integrity. To enforce the view of the Madras High Court and to remove the apprehensions expressed in the Bombay judgments a clause was added to sec 14 of the Code of 1882, by sec 5 of Act 7 of 1888 to make it clear on the one hand that a suit was maintainable on the judgment of a Court of a Native State or any other Court in Asia or Africa (u), and on the other hand to provide that in such a suit the British Indian Court should not be precluded from inquiry into the merits of the case (v). The clause has now been omitted as the reason for the distinction between Courts of Asia and Africa and Courts of other countries has disappeared especially in the case of Japan. The result is that a suit will lie upon a foreign judgment of any Court in Asia or Africa, and such a suit now stands upon the same footing as a suit brought on the judgment of a foreign Court in Europe or America.

Though a foreign judgment may be enforced by a suit in British India, it is not to be supposed that British Indian Courts are bound in all cases to take cognizance of the suit, and they may refuse to entertain it on grounds of expediency (w).

Operation of the section—The operation of the section may be illustrated by the following cases—

(a) A sues B in a foreign Court. If the suit is dismissed the decision will operate as a bar to a fresh suit by A in British India on the original cause of action unless the decision is inoperative by reason of one or more of the circumstances specified in the section (x). If a decree is passed in favour of A in the foreign Court, and A sues B on the judgment in British India, B will be precluded from putting in issue the same matters that were directly and substantially in issue in the suit in the foreign Court unless the decision of the foreign Court is inoperative on any one of the six grounds specified in the section.

(b) A obtained a decree against B in the Cochin Court and applied for execution of the decree in the High Court of Bombay. [Decrees of the Cochin Court may be executed in British India under sec 44.] It was proved that A obtained the decree at Cochin by concealment of essential facts and by fraud [see cl (e) of the section]. It was held that execution of the decree should be refused (y).

A British Indian Court will not give effect to a foreign judgment pronounced by a Court without jurisdiction.—The leading case on the subject is Gurdial v Paja of Faridkot (z). In that case A sued B in the Court of the Native State of Faridkot claiming Rs 60,000 alleged to have been misappropriated by B while in A's service at Faridkot. B did not appear at the hearing and an ex parte decree was passed against him. B was a native of another Native State Jhind. Alterations in the sections -- Clause (a) is now "The last clause of sec 14 of the Act of 1882 has been omitted as to which see note below, 'How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India' Other alterations are verbal Foreign judgment -- The expression "foreign judgment" is defined in sec 2 as meaning the judgment of a foreign Court, that is a Court situate beyond the limits of British India which has no authority in British India and is not established or continued by the Governor General in Council. The present section provides that a foreign judgment may operate as res judicata except in the six cases specified in the section, and of course in order to so operate the other conditions of sec 11 must be fulfilled (a). The foreign Court must be competent to try the suit, not only as regards pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction and the subject matter of the suit, but also with reference to its territorial jurisdiction. So a decision of a Kathiawar Court as to a custom governing partition will not be res judicata in a suit for partition between the same parties of lands in British territory (a). In matters of foreign judgments the Courts here are guided by very much the same principles as those adopted by the Courts of England (b). As in England the foreign judgment must be final and conclusive in the Court in which it is passed and it may be final although it is subject to appeal to a higher Court (c). An act of State is not a judgment, and it cannot therefore have the effect of res judicata. Thus it has been held that an order of the Political Agent of Mewar and the Maharana of Udepore deposing a high priest from his gadi is not a foreign judgment, but merely an act of State, and it cannot, therefore, operate as res judicata (d).

How a foreign judgment may be enforced in British India -- A judgment of a Court of British India can only be enforced by proceedings in execution. A foreign judgment, however, may be enforced by proceedings in execution in certain specified cases only (s 44). In these cases a foreign judgment can only be enforced by a suit upon the judgment. That is to say, if A has obtained a decree against B for Rs 5,000 in a French Court at Pondicherry, and if B has got no property in Pondicherry to satisfy the decree, but has got property in Bombay, A may bring a suit against B in Bombay to recover the amount of the judgment. The suit must be brought within six years from the date of the judgment (e) and if a decree is passed in favour of A, he may proceed to execute it by attachment and sale of B's property in Bombay. See notes on sec 41.

Submission to jurisdiction of foreign Court.—Where a suit is instituted in British India on the judgment of a foreign Court, effect will be given to the judgment, though that Court had no jurisdiction over the defendant, if the defendant appears and defends the suit brought against him in that Court without making any objection to its jurisdiction (h), for having taken a chance of judgment in his favour, it is not right that he should take exception to jurisdiction when judgment goes against him (i). But if he protests against the jurisdiction, and the suit is then proceeded with against him, the judgment is a nullity, and no effect will be given to it in a suit brought on the same facts made at an early stage of the case had submission to jurisdiction (j) submission to jurisdiction A defendant who employs a pleader in a suit in a foreign Court will not be said to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court if the pleader states at the hearing that he has no instructions from his client (k). But if a defendant while protesting against the jurisdiction, appears on the argument of the point of jurisdiction, thereby taking the chance of getting a decision in his favour, he will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the Court (l). A fortiori it is so if he also pleads on the merits (m). On the same principle the Lahore High Court held that an application to a foreign Court to set aside an ex parte decree is a submission to its jurisdiction (n). But this has been dissented from on the ground that a submission after decree is of no effect, and when a defendant applied to a foreign Court to set aside its decree passed without jurisdiction after the decree had been transferred for execution to a Court in British India, the Madras High Court held that the decree continued to be a nullity and inexecutable (o). But submission is not voluntary if the appearance is made only to release property seized by a foreign tribunal in attachment or other proceedings, in such a case the judgment of the foreign tribunal is not binding on the party. Whether submission was voluntary or it was for the purpose of saving property is a pure question of fact (p). A person who sues in a foreign Court as plaintiff voluntarily submits to the jurisdiction and cannot afterwards dispute it (q). An ex parte decree was passed by a Court of a Native State against a native of British India who was not resident in that State. In 1926 the decree was transferred under sec 44 to a British Court for execution. The judgment-debtor's movable property was attached and the judgment-debtor paid Rs 100 into the British Court and applied for further time. In 1928 the decree was again transferred to the same British Court for execution, and the judgment then for the first time objected that the decree was a nullity for want of jurisdiction, but it was held that the judgment debtor's appearance in the British Court did not amount to submission to the foreign Court, and that the objection was not barred by res judicata (r).

Agreement to submit to foreign jurisdiction—Where there is an express agreement to submit to the jurisdiction of a foreign Court, a judgment pronounced by such Court binds the parties and effect will be given to such judgment in British Indian Courts (s).

1860 he left Jhind, and went to Faridkot to take up service under A. In 1874 he left A's service, and returned to Jhind. The suit was brought against him in 1879. At the date of the suit B neither resided in Faridkot nor was he a domiciled subject of the Faridkot State nor did he owe allegiance to that State. On these facts the Faridkot State had on general principles of International Law no jurisdiction to entertain the suit against B in respect of the claim which it should be noted, was a mere personal claim as distinguished from a claim relating to land or movables (a). The decree of the Faridkot Court was therefore an absolute nullity. A then sued B in a British Indian Court on the judgment of the Faridkot Court. The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground that the Faridkot Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. This decision was upheld by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The mere fact that the alleged embroilment took place at Faridkot was not sufficient to give jurisdiction to the Faridkot Court. The result would be the same if the suit were for damages for breach of a contract entered into by B with A at Faridkot (b). In other words a foreign Court cannot assume jurisdiction in cases where the claim is a personal one merely because the cause of action arose within its jurisdiction. But if B was residing at Faridkot at the date of the suit, the Faridkot Court would have had complete jurisdiction. In the case of personal claims it is residence alone that gives jurisdiction in a suit against a foreigner (c). The same rule applies where the country in which the judgment was passed and that in which it is sought to be enforced have separate and distinct systems of administration and judicature though owing allegiance to the same Sovereign. Thus a decree passed by the Ceylon Court [which is a foreign Court within the meaning of sec 2] in a suit on a contract against a native of British India who was not at the time of the action residing in Ceylon is a nullity and it cannot be enforced by a suit in a Court of British India (d).

Suppose that in the above case the Faridkot Legislature had passed an Act empowering the Courts of Faridkot to entertain suits in cases where the cause of action had arisen in Faridkot though the defendant was a foreigner neither residing in Faridkot nor owing any allegiance or obedience to the Faridkot State. Could effect be then given to the judgment of the Faridkot Court in a suit brought upon the judgment in a Court in British India? It could not—for jurisdiction conferred against the general principles of international law is not recognised and no one State can by its legislation confer jurisdiction upon its Court to entertain a suit in respect of a personal claim against foreigners who at the date of the suit were neither resident in that State nor owed any

Division of the High Court of Justice of England (a foreign Court) against a British Indian subject residing in British India in an action founded on a breach of a contract committed within the jurisdiction of that Court, is not a nullity, and a suit may be brought on the judgment in British India (g).

In the case of the Raja of Faridkot the decree passed against the defendant by the foreign Court was an ex parte decree, that is to say, the defendant did not appear before the foreign Court, and the decree was passed in his absence. But what if the defendant had appeared and defended the suit in the foreign Court? This question is considered in the following paragraph.

But if he protests against the jurisdiction, and the suit is then proceeded with against him, the judgment is a nullity, and no effect will be given to it in a suit brought on the judgment. The protest against jurisdiction must be made at an early stage of the proceedings, hence where no objection to the jurisdiction was made until the case had reached the stage of appeal, it was held that there was submission to jurisdiction (j). Nice questions sometimes arise as to what amounts to submission to jurisdiction. A defendant who employs a pleader in a suit in a foreign Court will not be said to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of that Court if the pleader states at the hearing that he has no instructions from his client (k). But if a defendant while protesting against the jurisdiction, appears on the argument of the point of jurisdiction, thereby taking the chance of getting a decision in his favour, he will be deemed to have submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the Court (l). A fortiori it is so if he also pleads on the merits (m). But this has been dissented from on the ground that a submission after decree is of no effect, and when a defendant applied to a foreign Court to set aside its decree passed without jurisdiction after the decree had been transferred for execution to a Court in British India, the Madras High Court held that the decree continued to be a nullity and inexecutable (o). by the Judicial Committee, affirming the judgment of the Madras High Court, that the judgment sued on was not given on the merits of the case and that the suit was not maintainable. It has also been held by the same tribunal that a judgment on an award obtained in England by default cannot be sued on in India, since it is not a judgment "on the merits of the case" (d). A foreign judgment passed on default of appearance of the defendant duly served with summons on the allegations contained in the plaint without any trial on evidence, is not one passed "on the merits of the case," and a suit cannot be brought on such judgment in any Court in British India (e), but it is otherwise if a decree, though ex parte, is passed after hearing evidence adduced by the plaintiff (f). Where a suit in a foreign Court is adjourned for settlement, and it is agreed between the parties that if the suit is not settled judgment should be passed for the plaintiff, and there being no settlement the plaintiff appears on the adjourned date but the defendant does not appear and judgment is passed for the plaintiff according to the agreement, the judgment is one on the merits of the case, and a suit can be brought on such a judgment in a Court in British India (g). It cannot be said of a judgment that it was not given on the merits merely because it proceeds on a wrong view as to the burden of proof or the legal liability of a party (h).

Clause (c)—The mistake must be apparent on the face of the proceedings. In England it has been held that a mere mistake as to English law will not vitiate a foreign judgment, even though the mistake may appear on the face of the proceedings (i). In an old Madras case (j) this clause was referred to, where a foreign Court had exercised jurisdiction contrary to the principles of International Law, but such a case would now fall under clause (a).

Clause (d)—The expression "natural justice" in this clause refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case. The mere fact that a foreign judgment is wrong in law does not make it one opposed to natural justice. There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice (l). Thus a foreign judgment obtained without notice of the suit to the defendant is contrary to natural justice, and a suit on such judgment is not maintainable in a British Indian Court (l). So also a judgment based on a third review after two applications for review had been refused (m), or a judgment against a minor defendant for whom no guardian ad litem had been appointed (n). But notice served on an agent empowered to sue and defend suits in the foreign Court is sufficient (o). As to sufficiency of notice, if the foreign Court has held service of the notice to be sufficient, it must be taken to be correct in the absence of evidence to the contrary (p).

Clause (e)—All judgments whether domestic or foreign are void if obtained by fraud. In the case of domestic judgments the fraud must be extrinsic to the matter tried but apparently this rule does not apply to foreign judgments (q).

by the Judicial Committee, affirming the judgment of the Madras High Court, that the judgment sued on was not given on the merits of the case and that the suit was not maintainable. It has also been held by the same tribunal that a judgment on an award obtained in England by default cannot be sued on in India, since it is not a judgment "on the merits of the case" (d). A foreign judgment passed on default of appearance of the defendant duly served with summons on the allegations contained in the plaint without any trial on evidence, is not one passed "on the merits of the case," and a suit cannot be brought on such judgment in any Court in British India (e), but it is otherwise if a decree, though ex parte, is passed after hearing evidence adduced by the plaintiff (f). Where a suit in a foreign Court is adjourned for settlement, and it is agreed between the parties that if the suit is not settled judgment should be passed for the plaintiff, and there being no settlement the plaintiff appears on the adjourned date but the defendant does not appear and judgment is passed for the plaintiff according to the agreement, the judgment is one on the merits of the case, and a suit can be brought on such a judgment in a Court in British India (g). It cannot be said of a judgment that it was not given on the merits merely because it proceeds on a wrong view as to the burden of proof or the legal liability of a party (h).

Clause (c)—The mistake must be apparent on the face of the proceedings. In England it has been held that a mere mistake as to English law will not vitiate a foreign judgment, even though the mistake may appear on the face of the proceedings (i). In an old Madras case (j) this clause was referred to, where a foreign Court had exercised jurisdiction contrary to the principles of International Law, but such a case would now fall under clause (a).

Clause (d) —The expression “ natural justice ” in this clause refers rather to the form of procedure than to the merits of the particular case. The mere fact that a foreign judgment is wrong in law does not make it one opposed to natural justice. There must be something in the procedure anterior to the judgment which is repugnant to natural justice (k). Thus a foreign judgment obtained without notice of the suit to the defendant is contrary to natural justice and a suit on such judgment is not maintainable in a British Indian Court (l). So also a judgment based on a third review after two applications for review had been refused (m), or a judgment against a minor defendant for whom no guardian ad litem had been appointed (n). But notice served on an agent empowered to sue and defend suits in the foreign Court is sufficient (o). As to sufficiency of notice, if the foreign Court has held service of the notice to be sufficient, it must be taken to be correct in the absence of evidence to the contrary (p).

Clause (e)—All judgments whether domestic or foreign are void if obtained by fraud. In the case of domestic judgments the fraud must be extrinsic to the matter tried but apparently this rule does not apply to foreign judgments (g).

Clause (f) — Presumably a foreign judgment for a gambling debt would not be enforced in British India.

Limitation — The period of limitation for a suit on a foreign judgment is six years from the date of the judgment. see Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, art. 117. The pendency of an appeal in the foreign country will not bar a suit on a foreign judgment (r). But if the appeal results in a decree dismissing the appeal, the appellate decree affords a fresh starting point for limitation (r1).

Whereas in the case of a suit on a contract limitation merely bars the remedy but does not extinguish the right, the judgment of a foreign Court is not open to the objection that the suit was barred by the law of limitation applicable in the country where the contract was made (s).

Where the Court of a foreign country holds, applying its own law, that a suit is not barred by the law of limitation, it cannot be said that it has refused to recognize the law of British India because the suit was barred according to the law of British India (t).

14. [S. 13. Expln. VI.] The Court shall presume, upon the production of any document purporting to be a certified copy of a foreign judgment, that such judgment was pronounced by a Court of competent jurisdiction, unless the contrary appears on the record; but such presumption may be displaced by proving want of jurisdiction.

PLACE OF SUING.

15. [S. 13.] Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it.

Courts in which suits to be instituted

Place of suing — This heading governs sections 15 to 25. Place means place in British India and the heading indicates that the Courts referred to in these sections are in British India, and the immovable property referred to is also in British India. As said by the Lahore High Court these sections "regulate the venue within British India and apply only to those places where the Code is in force. They deal with matters of domestic concern and prescribe rules for the assumption of territorial jurisdiction by British Indian Courts in matters within their cognizance and do not govern claims against persons or things wholly outside their jurisdiction." procedure a suit below a certain value ought to be instituted in the Court of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge has still jurisdiction to try it (x) But also as a matter of procedure, he ought not to entertain the suit, but should return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Munsif as provided by O 7, r 10 [Code of 1882, s 57] (y) This is explained more fully below

Jurisdiction—The word "competent" used in this section has reference to the jurisdiction of a Court Jurisdiction means the extent of the authority of a Court to administer justice not only with reference to the subject matter of the suit but also to the local and pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction. Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try suits in which the amount or value of the subject matter exceeds Rs. 2 000, this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards its pecuniary limits. Nor can it try suits for specific performance of contracts or for an injunction or for a dissolution of partnership, this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards the subject matter of a suit Nor can it try a suit on a cause of action that has arisen beyond the local limits of the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, this is said to be the local limits of its jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of a Court may again be original or appellate In the exercise of its original jurisdiction a Court entertains original suits. In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction it entertains appeals The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore have no original jurisdiction.

Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit—There are in British India a large number of Courts. The High Courts of Calcutta Madras Bombay, Allahabad Patna, Lahore and Rangoon have been established each by a Royal Charter Other Courts in India have been established almost all by local Acts and they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction

In each of the three presidency towns, there is a High Court and a Small Cause Court, High Courts are empowered in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction to try suits of any value except suits falling within the jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts of which the value does not exceed Rs 100 (z) The pecuniary jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts is confined to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 2,000 (a) Thus both a High Court and a Presidency Small Cause Court are competent to try a suit say for Rs 500 for damages for breach of contract, but of these two Courts it is the Small Cause Court which is the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the suit The suit therefore shall be instituted in the Small Cause Court as required by the present section. This does not mean that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit It has jurisdiction to try the suit, but in order that the High Court may not be overcrowded with suits, the Legislature has established Small Cause Courts and the present section requires that suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try shall be brought in that Court There are however certain suits which a Small Cause Court is not competent to try such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property or for the fore closure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property or suits for injunction or for specific performance (b) These suits must be brought in the High Court, though the value of the suit may be under Rs 100 procedure a suit below a certain value ought to be instituted in the Court of the Munsif, the Subordinate Judge has still jurisdiction to try it (x). But also as a matter of procedure, he ought not to entertain the suit, but should return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Munsif as provided by O 7, r 10 [Code of 1882, s 57] (y). This is explained more fully below.

Jurisdiction—The word “competent” used in this section has reference to the jurisdiction of a Court. Jurisdiction means the extent of the authority of a Court to administer justice not only with reference to the subject matter of the suit but also to the local and pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction. Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to try suits in which the amount or value of the subject matter exceeds Rs 2 000, this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards its pecuniary limits. Nor can it try suits for specific performance of contracts or for an injunction or for a dissolution of partnership, this is said to be the jurisdiction of a Court as regards the subject matter of a suit. Nor can it try a suit on a cause of action that has arisen beyond the local limits of the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court, this is said to be the local limits of its jurisdiction.

The jurisdiction of a Court may again be original or appellate. In the exercise of its original jurisdiction a Court entertains original suits. In the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction it entertains appeals. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore have no original jurisdiction.

Court of lowest grade competent to try a suit—There are in British India a large number of Courts. The High Courts of Calcutta Madras Bombay, Allahabad, Patna Lahore and Rangoon have been established each by a Royal Charter. Other Courts in India have been established almost all by local Acts and they are of various grades with different pecuniary limits of jurisdiction.

In each of the three presidency towns, there is a High Court and a Small Cause Court, High Courts are empowered in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction to try suits of any value except suits falling within the jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts of which the value does not exceed Rs 100 (z). The pecuniary jurisdiction of Presidency Small Cause Courts is confined to suits of which the value does not exceed Rs. 2 000 (a). Thus both a High Court and a Presidency Small Cause Court are competent to try a suit, say for Rs 500 for damages for breach of contract, but of these two Courts it is the Small Cause Court which is the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the suit. The suit therefore shall be instituted in the Small Cause Court as required by the present section. This does not mean that the High Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. It has jurisdiction to try the suit, but in order that the High Court may not be overcrowded with suits, the Legislature has established Small Cause Courts and the present section requires that suits which a Small Cause Court is competent to try shall be brought in that Court. There are however, certain suits which a Small Cause Court is not competent to try such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property or for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property or suits for injunction or for specific performance (b). in the mofussil of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta are divided into three classes as shown in the following table —

| Bombay Presidency Act 14 of 1869 | Madras Presidency Act 3 of 1873 | Bengal, N W P, and Assam Act 12 of 1887 |
|--|------------------------------------|--|
| 1 District Courts | District Courts. | District Courts. |
| 2 Courts of Subordinate Judges of the first class | Subordinate Judges Courts | Subordinate Judges' Courts. |
| 3 Courts of Subordinate Judges of the second class | District Munsifs Courts | Munsifs Courts |

The jurisdiction of District Judges and Subordinate Judges, except Subordinate Judges of the second class in the Bombay Presidency, extends to all original suits, what ever may be the value of the suit But a District Court is a Court of superior grade to a Subordinate Judge's Court, for a District Court is the principal Court of original civil jurisdiction in the district and it is also the Court of appeal from decrees and orders in certain suits passed by other Courts in the district including Courts of Subordinate Judges. The jurisdiction of a Subordinate Judge of the second class in the Bombay Presidency extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 5,000. The jurisdiction of a District Munsif in the Madras Presidency extends to all original suits (not otherwise exempted from his cognizance) of which the value does not exceed Rs 2,500. The jurisdiction of a Munsif in Bengal, North Western Provinces and Assam extends to all original suits of which the value does not exceed Rs 1,000.

Both a Subordinate Judge and a Munsif have jurisdiction to try a suit, say, to recover Rs 500 for rent. But of these two Courts it is the Munsif's Court that is "the Court of the lowest grade competent to try the suit. The suit therefore "shall" be instituted in the Munsif's Court as required by the present section.

As to Civil Courts in the Central Provinces see Act 16 of 1885 in Oudh, Act 13 of 1879, in Jhansi, Act 18 of 1867. As to Provincial Small Cause Courts see Act 9 of 1887.

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of lower grade is instituted in a Court of higher grade—Suppose that a suit which under the provisions of this section ought to have been instituted in a Munsif's Court is brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge, and the Subordinate Judge, instead of returning the plaint under O 7, r 10, tries the suit notwithstanding objection taken by the defendant, and that a decree is passed against the defendant. Is the decree a nullity? No, for the Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to try the suit. It is a case of irregularity, not affecting the jurisdiction of the Court within the meaning of s 99 below (c). As to cases where a suit is by reason of over valuation brought in a Court of higher grade, see notes below, "Over valuation and under valuation."

Where a suit which ought to have been instituted in a Court of higher grade is instituted in a Court of lower grade—In such a case the Court of lower grade ought to return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to the Court of higher grade [O 7, r 10]. If this is not done, and the suit is heard by the Court of lower grade, the decree is one passed without jurisdiction.

(c) See Nadhi Lal v Mathur Hussain (1885) 7 A.L.J. 230 and Maitra Mondal v Hari (1890) 17 Cal 155 both cases of over valuation

but decided without reference to the Suits Valuation Act 1887

This is a case of want of jurisdiction as distinguished from a mere irregularity within the meaning of s 99 below (d) As to cases where a suit is by reason of under valuation brought in a Court of lower grade, see notes below, "Over valuation and under valuation."

Principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction—It is the plaintiff's valuation in his plaint which fixes the jurisdiction of the Court, and not the amount which may be found and decreed by the Court (e) Thus where in a suit for accounts the plaintiff values his claim at less than Rs 5 000 which is the maximum pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court in which the suit is filed and the amount found due on taking the accounts exceeds Rs 5 000 the Court has power to pass a decree for that amount (f) But jurisdiction may be destroyed if the plaint is so amended as to exceed the pecuniary limits of the Court in which the suit is instituted (g)

Over valuation and under valuation—Although it is the value put by the plaintiff on his suit that prima facie determines jurisdiction, it does not follow that a plaintiff is at liberty to assign any arbitrary value to the suit and thus be free to choose the Court in which he should bring the suit (h) Cases do occur in which a plaintiff over values his suit or he under values it The over valuation or under valuation may be erroneous, or it may be done intentionally by the plaintiff for the purpose of bringing the suit in a Court different from that in which it would be if it were properly valued. If the over valuation or under valuation is patent on the face of the plaint, it is the duty of the Court to which the plaint is presented to return it to the plaintiff to be presented to the proper Court under O 7, r 10 If it is not patent on the face of the plaint, but objection is taken by the defendant that it is over valued or under valued, the Court may require the plaintiff to show that the suit has been properly valued if there are prima facie grounds for believing that the suit has not been properly valued (i) but not otherwise (j)

Suppose that a suit has been over valued or under valued so that it is brought in a Court whose grade is higher or lower than that of the Court which would have been competent to try it if the suit were properly valued Is the decree liable to be set aside or reversed by the appellate Court? No not unless (1) the objection as to jurisdiction by reason of over valuation or under valuation was taken by the defendant in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were framed or (2) the over valuation or under valuation is found by the appellate Court to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the merits (k), and it matters not whether the over valuation or under valuation was erroneous or intentional (l) See Suits Valuation Act, 1887 s 11

The High Court of Calcutta has held that where a suit is under valued with the result that the appeal from the decree in the suit is heard and decided by a District Court instead of by a High Court, the decree of the District Court is one passed by a Court without jurisdiction and therefore a nullity This happens in cases where a suit of which the true value exceeds Rs 5 000 is valued at less than Rs 5 000 A brings a suit against B for possession of immovable property in the Court of a Subordinate

Judge The real value of the suit exceeds Rs 5,000, but the suit is valued at Rs 2,100 only. A decree is passed in the suit for A. B files an appeal in the District Court, but the appeal is dismissed. According to the Calcutta decisions, the decree of the District Court is a nullity as being one passed without jurisdiction. The reason given is that the true value of the suit being more than Rs 5,000, the proper forum of appeal if the suit had been properly valued, would have been the High Court, and not the District Court, and the result of the under valuation was to oust the jurisdiction of the High Court as the Court of Appeal (m).

Where the subject matter of a suit does not admit of being satisfactorily valued—In some suits the subject matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value, e.g., suits for restitution of conjugal rights, suits to remove a karnavan (n), suits to direct registration of a document under the Registration Act 1908, s 77 (o) etc. The court fee in such suits is Rs 10 as provided by the Court Fees Act 1870, Sch II art 17, cl vi. There is a distinction, however, between valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction and valuation for the purpose of ascertaining court fee (p). The subject now under consideration is valuation for purposes of jurisdiction.

In cases where the subject matter is not capable of being estimated at a money value it is provided by s 9 of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, that the value of the suit for purposes of jurisdiction is what the High Court may specify by rules made under that section. Where no rules are made, the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta have said that the safest and the most convenient course is to treat the valuation made by the plaintiff as prima facie the true valuation, but subject to correction by the Court if the defective valuation has been due to an improper motive, and the Court must decide what should be considered to be the proper value (q). The cases in which the above rule was laid down were suits for restitution of conjugal rights. In a recent case however the High Court of Madras said that though the rule adopted by the High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta might be appropriate in suits for restitution of conjugal rights it was not so in suits which affected property and that the best rule in such cases was to value the suit according to the value of the property liable to be affected thereby (r). Thus a suit to compel registration of an instrument whether the instrument be registrable compulsorily (e.g., an instrument of gift) or voluntarily (e.g., a will) is valued in Madras according to the value of the property that would be affected by the suit (s), and a suit to set aside an instrument, according to the value of the plaintiff's interest in the instrument (t). The Madras High Court has also held that though the court fee on a suit for the removal of a karnavan is only Rs 10, it does not follow that a District Munsif has jurisdiction to try such a suit where the value of the tarvad property exceeds the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Munsif's Court (u), and that a Munsif has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside an adoption, if the value of the property, which would be lost to the adopted son if the adoption were set aside exceeds the pecuniary jurisdiction of that Court (v). The High Courts of Allahabad and Calcutta would probably not agree. In fact, the High Court of Allahabad has held that the value for the purposes of jurisdiction, of a suit to set aside an adoption is not the value of the property which may possibly change hands if the adoption be set aside, but the value put upon his plant by the plaintiff (w) But whichever view be correct it is certain since the enactment of the Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887) (s. 11) that when once a suit of this class is decided on its merits by the lower Court the decision will not be reversed in appeal on the ground of want of jurisdiction, unless the cognizance of the suit by that Court has prejudicially affected its disposal on the merits.

- (f) for the recovery of movable property actually under distraint or attachment, shall be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate

Provided that a suit to obtain relief respecting, or compensation for wrong to immovable property held by or on behalf of the defendant may, where the relief sought can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, be instituted either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate, or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides, or carries on business, or personally works for gain

Explanation—In this section “property” means property situate in British India

Alterations in the section—The words with or without rent or profits in cl (a) are new The word sale in cl (c) has been newly added.

Subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by law—The pecuniary limitations have been referred to in the notes on sec 15 Instances of other limitations are suits under sec 9¹ or suits in Bombay against Government or an officer of Government in his official capacity (x) which can only be filed in a High Court or a District Court

Chartered High Courts.—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s 120). The High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Patna, Lahore and Rangoon are Chartered High Courts, each having been established by a royal charter. The nature and extent of the jurisdiction of these Courts is defined by the charter for each of these Courts. The High Courts of Allahabad, Patna and Lahore have no original civil jurisdiction. The original civil jurisdiction of the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay is defined by clause 12 of the charter which empowers them to try suits "for land or other immovable property, if such land or property be situated wholly within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction or, in case leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within such limits". There have been many conflicting decisions as to the meaning of the expression "suits for land or other immovable property" in the Letters Patent, but the more specific and detailed provisions of this section leave no scope for uncertainty.

Scope of the section.—As already stated this is one of a group of sections which refer to Courts in British India and to immovable property situate in British India. This is specially expressed in the Explanation lest the proviso be construed as giving a mofussil Court jurisdiction in respect of immovable property out of British India, for British Indian Courts have no such jurisdiction (y). It specifies the Court in which suits relating to immovable property and suits for the recovery of movable property actually under distrain or attachment are to be instituted. Section 19 indicates the Courts in which suits for compensation for wrong done to the person or to movable property are to be instituted. Section 20 is a general section.

Clause (a) suits for recovery of immovable property.—A suit for the recovery of immovable property situate in Bombay must be instituted in a Court in Bombay having jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The Small Cause Court in Bombay has no jurisdiction to try such suit (z). The suit must therefore be brought in the High Court of Bombay. Hence it is that the section commences with the words "subject to the pecuniary or other limitations prescribed by any law". The insertion of the words "with or without rent or profits" is intended to remove any difficulty there may be where the defendant does not reside within the local limits of the Courts within whose jurisdiction the property is situate.

Clause (b) suit for partition of immovable property.—For cases where the property is in the jurisdiction of different Courts, see sec 17 post. If part of the property is outside British India, the Court will deal with the property in British India while declining jurisdiction as to the rest (a). The Lahore High Court has recently held that a British Court can in a partition suit deal with property situate in a Native State (b). But this is incorrect.

Clause (c) suit for foreclosure, sale or redemption.—A mortgagor certain immovable property to B to secure payment of money lent to him by B. Here A is the mortgagor and B is the mortgagee. If A does not repay the loan on the due date, B may institute a suit against A for sale of the mortgaged property, so that the mortgage debt may be paid out of the sale proceeds of the property, or he may sue for foreclosure of the mortgage. The decree in a foreclosure suit provides that if the mortgagor fails to pay the amount that may be found due to the mortgagee within a time specified by the Court (generally six months), the mortgagor shall be absolutely debarred of all right to redeem the property (c). If A offers payment of the mortgage-debt to B, but B disputes the amount and refuses to reconvey A may sue B for redemption of the mortgage.

and the Court will pass a decree ordering an account to be taken of what will be due to B, and directing that upon A paying to B the amount so due, B shall reconvey the property to A (d) Suits for foreclosure, sale or redemption must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the mortgaged property is situate

A Court cannot declare a charge on property wholly outside its jurisdiction and if it does a purchaser under such a decree would be in no better position than a purchaser under a money decree (e)

Clause (d). suits for the determination of any other right to or interest in immovable property—There is no definition of immovable property in the Code “Immovable property” is defined in the General Clauses Act, 1897, s. 3, cl (25), as including land, benefits to arise out of land, and things attached to the earth or permanently fastened to anything attached to the earth. Trees, standing on land are immovable property (f) But once the trees are severed from the land, they become movable property. Growing crops are movable property (see s. 2, cl. 13). Land includes water and a right of fishery in an enclosed water is immovable property (g). Benefits to arise out of land include incorporeal hereditaments such as a right of ferry (h) also pensions and allowances charged upon land and rents. Thus a hat is immovable property (i) and so is the life interest of a widow in the rents and profits of her husband’s estate (j) “Immovable property,” as stated above, includes “benefits to arise out of land.” Rent that has already accrued due is movable property, for it is a benefit which has arisen out of land, but rent that is to accrue due is immovable property, for it is a benefit to arise out of land. Hence a suit for arrears of rent is governed not by the provisions of this section, but by those of s. 20, and it may be instituted in any one of the Courts specified in that section, although in such suit the plaintiff’s title to the property of which the rent is claimed may incidentally come in question (l) But a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff’s right to rent where such right is denied comes under cl. (d) of the present section, and must be instituted in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate (l) So also a suit for rent and ejection under sec. 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act (m) A suit to recover a share of the sale proceeds of land which have already been realized is a suit for money governed by the provisions of s. 20 (n) But a suit by a vendor of land for the recovery of unpaid purchase money against the buyer who refuses to complete the purchase, is a suit “for the determination of any right to or interest in immovable property” within the meaning of cl. (d) (o) A suit by a mortgagee to recover the mortgage debt from the mortgagor personally is a suit for debt governed by the provisions of s. 20 but if in addition to the claim against the mortgagor personally the mortgagee seeks to recover the mortgage debt by sale of the mortgaged property, the suit will come under cl. (c) of the present section (p) A suit for maintenance is governed by the provisions of s. 20, but if in addition to the claim for maintenance the plaintiff claims that she is entitled to a charge on immovable property in the hands of the defendant, the case is one within cl. (d) of this section (q) A suit for dissolution of partnership with the usual ancillary reliefs is not a suit within cl. (d) merely because part of the partnership assets consists of a factory (r)

Income and mesne profits of land situate outside British India—A suit will lie in a Court of British India to establish a right to a share in income derived from grants of land situated outside British India but received by the defendant within the local limits of a British Indian Court (s). Similarly a suit to recover mesne profits of land situate outside British India of which the defendant was in wrongful possession but of which he subsequently delivered possession to the plaintiff may be instituted in a Court in British India (t). Both these cases fall under s. 10 below.

Clause (e) wrong to immovable property—This refers to torts affecting immovable property such as trespass (u) nuisance infringement of easements, etc.

Clause (f) movable property actually under distraint or attachment—Movable property under attachment constitutes an exception to the general rule that movables follow the person (v). The exception is probably founded on the fact that when such property is under attachment its locality is fixed. The Code follows this rule for the sake of convenience of judicial administration (w). The clause applies to Courts in British India but when movables are under attachment by a foreign Court and the defendant is resident in British India and is able to get the attachment removed it has been held that he can be ordered in execution of a personal decree to recover the property (x).

Proviso to the section—The last paragraph of the section provides that suits to obtain relief respecting or compensation for wrong to immovable property, may be instituted at the plaintiff's option either in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the property is situate or in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the defendant actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business or personally works for gain provided—

- (1) the property is held by or on behalf of the defendant,
- (2) the relief sought can be entirely obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant (y) and
- (3) the property is situate in and not beyond British India (z).

The proviso does not apply when the property is in the possession of the plaintiff (a). As the plaintiff has the option of suing in the local jurisdiction the scope of the proviso is more limited than in the rule of English Equity.

Equity acts in personam—This proviso is an application though in a highly modified form of the maxim Equity acts in personam. When it is said that Equity acts in personam what is meant is that the Court of Equity in England (now the Chancery Division of the High Court of Justice) has jurisdiction to entertain certain suits [suits in dis (a) (b) and (c) of the present section being entirely excluded] respecting immovable property though the property may be situate abroad if the relief sought can be obtained through the personal obedience of the defendant. The personal obedience of the defendant can be secured only if the defendant resides within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court or carries on business within those limits. For in the one case the person of the defendant being within the jurisdiction and in the other his personal property the Court may if he does not comply with the judgment direct the arrest of the defendant and commit him to jail or order that his goods be attached until he complies the other in district F. The Court in district X has jurisdiction under the section to order the sale not only of the property in district X, but also of the property in district F and to effect execution of its decree the property in district F (a). A is not allowed to bring two suits—one in the Court of district X and the other in the Court of district F. He may bring only one suit in either Court and it matters not if the properties are several, one in each district, or one property extending over two or more districts (c). The same rule applies to suits for partition (p) and to suits for the recovery of immovable property (q). A can sue in any Court in which any part of the immovable property is situate and he has the right to select his own forum (r). through this right may be controlled by the Court of appeal or the High Court, see secs. 22 and 23 below. But no partition can be made of property situate outside British India (s).

A bona fide compromise will not direct the Court of jurisdiction over jurisdiction has property vested in it. A sues B in a Court in district X to recover possession of two properties—one situate in district X and the other in district F. The suit is compromised as regards the property situate in district X. This does not take away the jurisdiction of the Court in district X to proceed with the suit as regards the property situate in district F unless it be shown that the compromise was a mere contrivance to defeat the power of the rule of procedure as to local jurisdiction (t).

May be instituted.—Cases are conflicting as to whether plaintiff sues in respect of a part of a property in one district only is barred from suing as to the other part or the rest of the property in another district in the jurisdiction of another Court. But the better opinion is that there is no bar and that the section is permissive (u). Thus if A succeeds at law to two properties, one in district X and the other in district F, A may sue in the Court of district X for the recovery of both properties. But if A sues in the Court of district X for the recovery of the property in that district only he will not be barred from suing subsequently in the Court of district F for the recovery of the property in that district.

Section 17 does not apply if the cause of action as to the property without the local limits of jurisdiction is different.—The plaintiff filed a suit in an Oudh Court to recover one immovable property within its jurisdiction and two immovable properties situate in the Punjab without jurisdiction. The plaintiff claimed to be entitled to these three properties under a will. He also joined in the suit a prayer to be declared mutawalli of a wakf of another property situate in the Punjab called the Khalikabad estate. The plaintiff had a right to include the first two Punjab properties in the Oudh suit but as to the other Punjab property the Privy Council said: 'There remains the question of the Khalikabad estate. Here the respondent cannot succeed unless he shows that under the terms of the deed creating the wakf he is the trustee. That question depends upon the construction of the deed. It is a separate and different cause of action from those which found the proceedings in respect of the other three properties. Their Lordships are unable to find any justification for bringing the suit in respect of this property elsewhere than in the Court of the district where the property is situate. Such jurisdiction

In a case already cited (u) the Allahabad High Court applied the section when the plaintiff was dispossessed of property in one district in June and property in another district in August but the dispossessions were by the same person and part of the same contest of right

Immovable property within the jurisdiction of different Courts—As already stated the immovable property to which this section refers must be situated in British India. Courts in British India have no jurisdiction over property situate outside British India (x). When a mortgagee sued for sale in the Court of the Sub judge of Satara, on a mortgage of properties situate in Satara Belgaum and Kolhapur, the Court had jurisdiction to deal with the Satara property and with the Belgaum property situate in the jurisdiction of another Court in British India but not with the Kolhapur property situate outside British India (y). The Court will deal with property in British India if the suit is for partition while declining jurisdiction as to the rest (z). So also if part of the property is in a Scheduled District outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court and outside the local extent of the Code (a)

Execution—When the Court has power to pass a decree as to immovable property in a different jurisdiction it has also power to execute it. See note under sec 38 Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree

Uncertainty of local limits of jurisdiction—The uncertainty which the Legislature had in view was the alteration of boundaries by fluvial action (c) The absence of a notification of the boundaries of a district was held to create a reasonable uncertainty (d)

And there has been a consequent failure of justice —These words are new They have been added in order still further to restrict the taking of technical objections as to jurisdiction Alla Ditta v Abdul Qadir (e) is an instance of an objection to jurisdiction being disallowed although no statement was recorded as required by sub sec (1)

Scope of Section—Section 16 refers to suits for immovable property which have to be filed in the local jurisdiction Section 20 refers to personal actions such as action in tort or contract, where jurisdiction depends upon the residence of the defendant or the accrual of the cause of action. Section 20 overlaps this section which gives an option where the cause of action accrues in the jurisdiction of one Court and the defendant resides in the jurisdiction of another Court The section is limited to torts in British India and to defendants residing in British India (f) It excludes suits for an injunction and suits in respect of torts committed outside British India Such suits fall, where the defendant is resident in British India, not under this section but under section 20

Wrong—Wrong means a tort or actionable wrong, i.e., an act which is legally wrongful as prejudicially affecting a legal right of the plaintiff (g) But it must be a tort affecting the plaintiff a person, or his reputation as in the illustrations, or his movable property, for torts affecting immovable property such as trespass or nuisance or infringement of easements fall under section 16 (c)

The plaintiff may sue either where the defendant resides or the wrong was committed (A) A wrong may however consist of a series of acts and it is sometimes not easy to specify the place where it was committed. Thus in a case from Burma (1) the defendant at Pyapon wrongfully obtained a magistrate's order for the seizure of plaintiff's boats at Rangoon and it was held that the Rangoon Court had jurisdiction as the wrong was done at Rangoon.

Suits against Government—The word "resides" refers only to natural persons. The words "carries on business" refer to commercial business. The section therefore does not apply to suits against the Secretary of State for damages for a tort where the tort is committed outside the jurisdiction. Such suits can only lie in the Court of the place where the tort is committed (J)

He may also sue them at Calcutta, where B resides, or at Delhi, where C resides, but in each of these cases, if the non resident defendant objects, the suit cannot proceed without the leave of the Court.

Alterations in the Section—The words "every suit" have been substituted for the words "all other suits" in the Code of 1882. The words "wholly or in part" in cl (c) are new. Explanation III to s 17 of the Code of 1882, which related to causes of action in cases of contracts, has been omitted in view of the addition of the words "wholly or in part" in cl (c). See notes below "Cause of action in suits on contracts."

Subject to the limitations aforesaid—The limitations are the pecuniary and other limitations referred to in s 16. See note under the same heading below that section. The former section was a residuary section referring to "all other suits" and as such was held to be subject to s 19 (k). The present section overlaps section 19 and is subject to section 16 and by implication to section 15.

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original civil jurisdiction (see s. 120).

Scope of the section—This is a general section embracing all personal actions. At common law actions are either personal or real. Personal actions are also called transitory because they may occur anywhere, such as actions for tort to person or to movable property or suits on contract. Real actions are actions against the res or property and are called local because they must be brought in the forum rei sitæ, that is the place where the immovable property is situate. An action may also be a mixed action being partly real and partly personal. Torts to immovable property such as trespass and nuisance are mixed actions and are referred to in s 16 (e). Otherwise s 16 deals with real and local actions while secs 19 and 20 deal with personal or transitory actions.

The limitations mentioned in this section exclude the real and mixed actions of s 16 and confine the section to personal actions. The plaintiff has the option of suing either (1) where the cause of action has accrued or (2) in the forum of the defendant, i.e., where the defendant resides, or carries on business or personally works for gain (f). This alternative is shown in the illustrations which are taken from two old cases, the first from Winter v Way (m) and the second from DeSouza v Coles (n).

"Actually and voluntarily resides"—As to personal actions, residence will give jurisdiction even when the cause of action has arisen outside British India. Thus a partner was entitled to sue in the Court of Bulsar for the dissolution of a partnership commenced and carried on in foreign territory because the defendant partner at the time of the institution of the suit resided in Bulsar (o). And a suit for arrears of rent of lands in a Native State may be filed in a British Indian Court in the jurisdiction of which the defendant resides, for rent that has already accrued due constitutes a personal claim (p). On the other hand if the cause of action has arisen in the jurisdiction, a British Indian Court may entertain a suit against a non resident foreigner. See note below "Suit against a non resident foreigner."

The word "actually" excludes domicile or constructive residence, while on the other hand compulsory residence does not confer jurisdiction. Under the Code of 1859 a man was held to reside at a place where he was lawfully confined, but the word voluntarily renders these cases obsolete.

The word "resides" is construed according to the supposed intention of the Legislature (q), and even in this Code it is used sometimes in a more restrictive and sometimes in a more extended sense, see s. 136, O 3, r 2, and O 25, r 1. However there appears to be no distinction between the meaning of the word "resides" in secs 16, 19, and 20 and of the word "dwells" in cl 12 of the Letters Patent (r). Therefore cases decided on the latter word may be considered authorities on the construction of the former.

"Dwells" within the meaning of clause 12 of Letters Patent.—The dwelling or residence must be of a more or less permanent character. It must be of such a nature as to show that the High Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum (s). Therefore when the defendant has a permanent dwelling at one place, he cannot be said to "dwell" at a place where he has lodged for a temporary purpose only, e.g., to defend a suit brought against him (t), or for a change while on leave (u).

Every person is deemed in law to have a dwelling or place of residence, and so if he has no permanent place of residence, he will be deemed to 'dwell' where he is actually staying at the time. Thus where a defendant, who was Political Agent at Kolhapur residing in a Government building there sold his furniture and other effects and left Kolhapur on a year's furlough, and while en route to England stayed in Bombay for three days before sailing he was held to dwell in Bombay so as to give jurisdiction to the High Court in a suit instituted against him during his stay in Bombay (v). And in a Calcutta case, a racing man, who had come to Calcutta for a month for racing, was held to dwell in Calcutta for he had no other residence at the time when the suit was instituted against him (w).

On the other hand a person may have more than one permanent place of residence at the same time. If so he will be deemed to 'dwell' in any one of the places where he is actually staying for the time being, and he may be sued in that place. In Orde v Skinner (x) the defendant, who had a dwelling place at Mussoorie, was held under the circumstances of the case to have another dwelling place at Bilaspur. Similarly where a defendant spent his time alternately in Calcutta and the mufassal, he could be sued in Calcutta where he was residing at the time of institution of the suit (y). But a person who has been living and carrying on business in Bombay for twenty years cannot be said to be residing at Ahmedabad because he has a family house at Ahmedabad which he visits occasionally, in such a case Ahmedabad cannot be said to be one of his places of residence (z) Where an Acharya (Hindu head priest), who had his permanent place of residence at Nathdwara where he had been installed on the gadi in 1879, came to Bombay for the first time in April 1889 at the invitation of his devotees and stayed in a house which he had purchased in 1888 for occasional residence and exchanged visits with his followers it was held in a suit brought against him in Bombay in May 1889 that he did not dwell in Bombay (a) Where a person who was domiciled and resided in Mysore left his house in charge of a servant, and hired a house in Madras to which he brought his wife and family, and apprenticed himself for a year to a Vakil in Madras it was held in a suit brought against him in Madras some months after his residence there that inasmuch as he had taken up his abode in Madras, meaning to remain there for several months, and was actually living there when the suit was instituted, he dwelled in Madras within the meaning of cl 12 of the Letters Patent (b)

'Carries on business' —These words also occur in cl 12 of the Letters Patent, and the decisions under that clause apply equally to cases arising under ss 16, 19 and 20. The word business is used in a restricted sense (c) and is limited to commercial business. The expression carries on business is intended to relate to business in which a man may contract debts and is liable to be sued by persons having business transactions with him (d) A Hindu priest who receives offerings from his followers cannot be said to carry on business, although the offerings are on such a large scale that he employs servants to collect and keep an account of them (e) A zemindari business has been held not to be the kind of business contemplated by this section (f) The phrase 'carries on business or personally works for gain' is inapplicable to the Secretary of State for India for whatever income is obtained by Government is held for the benefit of the Indian Exchequer (g) A person may carry on business at a place where he has no office or regular establishment. Thus a person residing in the mufassal who goes once or twice a week from the mufassal to a friend's house in Calcutta and does business there will be said to "carry on business in Calcutta" (h) The business need not be carried on personally (i) The phrase "carries on business" is used as distinct from the phrase "personally works for gain". It does not involve actual presence or personal effort and a man may carry on business in a place through an agent or through a manager or by his servants without having ever gone there. It means having an interest in a business at that place, a voice in what is done, a share in the gain or loss and some control if not over the actual method of working, at any rate upon the existence of the business (j) But it is necessary that the following three conditions should concur, namely,—

(1) The agent must be a special agent who attends exclusively to the business of the principal and carries it on in the name of the principal, and not a general agent who does business for any one that pays him. Thus a trader in the mufassal, who habitually sends grain to Madras for sale by a firm of commission agents who have an independent business of selling goods for others on commission, cannot be said to 'carry on business'

Cause of action — Cause of action " means every fact which, if traversed, it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court (2) It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to a decree (a) Everything which if not proved would give the defendant a right to an immediate judgment must be part of the cause of action (b) It is in other words, a bundle of essential facts which it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove before he can succeed in the suit (c) It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or, in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour (d) The cause of action must be antecedent to the institution of the suit (e) So when the plaintiff filed his suit for ejectment fifteen days before he was entitled to possession he failed for want of a cause of action (f)

Cause of action in suits on contracts — The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 merely referred to the place where the cause of action arose. It was not clear whether this meant the whole cause of action or any part of the cause of action. The section was therefore amended by section 7 of Act 7 of 1888 which added an Explanation as to the significance of the term when applied to contracts. That Explanation was as follows —

Explanation III — In suits arising out of contract the cause of action arises within the meaning of this section at any of the following places, namely —

- (1) the place where the contract was made,
- (2) the place where the contract was to be performed or performance thereof completed,
- (3) the place where in performance of the contract any money to which the suit relates was expressly or impliedly payable

This Explanation made it clear that in suits on contracts cause of action meant the whole or any part of the cause of action but it was still not clear that it meant the same in other suits (g) In the present Code the words wholly or in part have been inserted after the word cause of action which makes it plain that all suits may be instituted where the cause of action arises wholly or in part (h). Explanation III has been omitted as no longer necessary but it is nevertheless a correct statement of what is still the law (i)

In a suit for damages for breach of contract the cause of action consists of the making of the contract and of its breach, so that the suit may be filed either at the place where the contract was made or at the place where it should have been performed and the breach occurred (j) Thus if a contract is made in Poona to be performed in Poona the whole cause of action arises in Poona and the suit for breach can only be filed in the Poona Court. But if the contract is made in Poona to be performed in Belgaum, the suit for its breach can be filed either in the Poona or the Belgaum Court. No leave of the Court is required in respect of a suit where part of the cause of action arises out of jurisdiction as in the case of High Court suits governed by clause 12 of the Letters Patent. But if the suit is for damages for breach of contract to ship goods to Calcutta and the goods are rejected at Calcutta the rejection is part of the cause of action and the suit can be filed in the High Court at Calcutta with leave under cl. 12 of the Letters Patent (l).

The making of a contract is part of the cause of action and a suit on a contract can always be filed at the place where it was made (f). The determination of the place where it was made is part of the law of contract. A contract by correspondence is made at the place where the letter of acceptance is posted (m), and if acceptance is by performance of a condition, the suit may be instituted at the place where the condition is performed (n).

The performance of a contract is part of the cause of action and a suit in respect of breach can always be filed at the place where the contract should have been performed or its performance completed (o). The usual case is that of a contract for sale of goods and a suit on such a contract may be filed at the place where the goods were deliverable or the price payable (p). Thus if goods for delivery at Allahabad are sold according to sample and paid for in Bombay, the buyer may sue in Allahabad if the goods prove not to be of sample quality (q). When a buyer at Kasganj ordered dyes from a seller at Delhi, but after paying for and opening the parcel found it to contain only clay, he was entitled to sue for damages at Kasganj (r). If not otherwise provided by the contract goods sold are deliverable at the place where they are sold, or if not ready, at the place of manufacture. If they are sent by common carrier at seller's risk the contract is performed at the place where they are delivered to the buyer, or if at buyer's risk, at the place where they are delivered to the carrier (s). In the case of a contract for Bombay, the place of performance is Bombay (t).

The place of performance is generally expressed in the contract and if not so expressed it may be inferred from the nature of the act. Thus a contract to repair a house must be performed where the house is situate, and an agreement to register a mortgage must be performed at the place where the mortgage is to be registered. The place of performance is neither visions of sections 48 and 49 of the Contract Act. Thus in Lleuchellin v Chund Lal the Court said that looking to the ordinary course of business it was the intention of the parties that payment should be made at plaintiff's place of business. In Sreenath Roy v Gally Das (x) a suit for breach of an agreement to mortgage premises outside Calcutta was held to lie in Calcutta as the plaintiff's place of business was by the intention of the parties (l) The amount due on a balance struck at foot of an account is payable at the place where the balance was struck although the transactions which were the subject of the account took place elsewhere (m) In Luchmee Chund v Zoraiear Mul (n) an account was taken and balance struck on dissolution of a partnership business at Muttra and the Privy Council held that although the partnership agreement had been entered into at Rutlam, the suit for the balance was properly instituted at Muttra as that was the place where the balance was struck and the amount became due and payable. On the other hand the mere fact that a cheque is sent in payment from a particular place will not alter the locality of the suit (o) It is the general agency with liability to account and refund the balance, that is the cause of action, and the fact that a particular collection is made by the agent at a different place will not give jurisdiction to sue at that place (p) If under a contract for the sale of goods the price is payable at the seller's place of business, but the buyer failing to pay the seller sends his man to the buyer's residence and the buyer pays at his residence the buyer cannot in a suit for compensation for inferiority of the goods take advantage of that fact and sue in the Court of the place where he resides (q) The fact that the creditor is described in a promissory note made at K as resident of A does not make A the place of payment so as to give jurisdiction to the Court at K. No place of performance being fixed the question, as stated above, is one of intention to be gathered from the contract and the surrounding circumstances (r)

The debtor must find his creditor—Under the English law if a place is appointed for the performance of a contract, it is the duty of the creditor to attend at the place named to receive payment, but if no place is appointed the debtor is bound to find the creditor and tender him the money, in other words, there is an implied promise to pay inter alia where the creditor resides or carries on business. Under the Indian law as enacted in sec 49 of the Indian Contract Act 1872, where no place is fixed for the performance of a promise, whether the promise is to deliver goods or to pay money (s) it is the duty of the debtor to apply to the creditor to appoint a reasonable place for the performance of the promise and to perform it at such place. But what if the debtor does not apply to the creditor to appoint a place? In such a case it has been held in some cases (t) that the common law rule applies and there is an implied promise to pay the creditor wherever he might be, and in some (u) that there is no such duty and no implied promise arises. The point arose in a recent case before the Judicial Committee (v) and it was held that where no application has been made by the debtor to appoint a place for the performance of the promise the place of performance is to be determined with reference to the intention of the parties and that in so doing regard should be had to the fact that the obligation to pay the creditor involves the further obligation of finding the creditor so as to pay him. Their Lordships said. Their Lordships do not think that in this state of the authorities it is possible to accede to the present contention that sec 49 of the Indian Contract Act gets rid of inferences, that should justly be drawn from the terms of the contracts itself or from the necessities of the case involving in the obligation to pay the creditor the further obligation of finding the creditor so as to pay him'. The common law rule, however, applies only when the creditor is within the realm. It cannot extend further than it does in England and a debtor in a Native State is not bound to find and pay a creditor in British India (w)

Negotiable Instruments—The cause of action in a suit on a negotiable instrument arises wherever any one of the facts the proof of which is essential to plaintiff's case occurs. Thus a suit may be filed at the place where the bill was drawn, or where it was accepted or dishonoured or where it was payable. A suit may be instituted at the place where a hundi was drawn (x). Where a promissory note was signed by the defendant at Secunderabad and delivered to the plaintiff at Madras, the Madras Court had jurisdiction as delivery was necessary to complete the plaintiff's title (y). If the promissory note is drawn in the jurisdiction of the Court, the suit may be filed there, although the promisee is described in the note as resident of another place (z). But a promissory note is presumed to have been drawn at the place where it purports to have been executed (a). If a hundi was neither drawn nor payable in Bombay, it cannot be sued on in the Bombay High Court although it was for the balance of an account of Bombay transactions (b). A hundi may be sued on at the place where it was dishonoured (c) or where it was payable (d). A suit on a promissory note executed at Vizianagram and payable at Secunderabad or Madras is maintainable in the High Court of Madras (e). A promissory note not expressly payable at Delhi was delivered to the payee there and it was presumed to be payable there so as to give jurisdiction to the Delhi Court (f).

The endorsee of a hundi may sue his endorser at the place of endorsement (g), and so may the assignee of a promissory note (h). The Calcutta High Court has held that an endorsee may sue the drawer and acceptor at the place of endorsement. For when D drew a hundi at Benares on his firm at Bombay in favour of B P & Co, a firm at Calcutta, and the hundi was endorsed by B P & Co to P in Calcutta, part of the cause of action was held to arise in Calcutta where the endorsement was made and P could sue in the Calcutta High Court after obtaining leave under clause 12 of the Charter (i). But the case is different when the drawer of a hundi raises money by negotiating his own hundi. A seller of goods drew hundis outside Madras on the buyer firm in Madras and negotiated them outside Madras. The Madras firm paid the endorsee and was entitled to sue the drawer in Madras to recover moneys overpaid as the amount of the hundi was in excess of what was due for the price of the goods (j). The over payment in Madras was part of the cause of action, but the payment received by the drawer from his endorsee could not be treated as a payment towards the contract. The negotiation by the drawer was only a provisional method of realizing the money from persons who were willing to accept the hundi for a small profit and take the trouble of getting paid. The High Court of Calcutta has held that if P accepts and pays a hundi in Calcutta for the accommodation of D in Cawnpore and D fails to pay, part of the cause of action arises in Calcutta (k).

Partnership—A suit for the dissolution of partnership and for accounts may be instituted either where the contracts of partnership was entered into (i) or where the business of the partnership was carried on (m) and if the business was carried on in two places the suit may be filed at either place (n) If the partnership has been dissolved and the accounts taken and balance struck, a suit for the balance will lie at the place where the balance was struck (o) The fact that a partnership owns immovable property does not make a suit for the dissolution of partnership and for accounts a suit for immovable property (p)

Cause of action in other suits—In an administration suit the undertaking to administer is part of the cause of action (q) The grant of probate or letters of administration is part of the cause of action in a suit for a legacy or for a distributive share in the estate of an intestate or in a suit for the administration of the estate of the deceased testator or intestate (r) In a contract of bailment the payment of the bailee's charges is part of the performance of the contract (s) and part of the cause of action also accrues at the place where the goods bailed are stored (t) A suit for a breach of a contract of betrothal may be filed where the breach takes place (u) and in case of a contract to marry at the place where the marriage was to have been celebrated (v) A suit for damages for misrepresentation will lie at the place where the misrepresentation was made (w) or for wrongful arrest at the place of arrest (x) or for death caused by negligence at the place where the death took place (y) or for libel at the place of publication (z) The cause of action in a suit to set aside a forged will arises at the place where the will was published (a) or if plaintiff's interest in any property is prejudicially affected by the will the suit may be filed at the place where that property is situate (b) In a suit to set aside a deed of release executed in Calcutta of plaintiff's interest in property in Bombay it was said that the cause of action did not arise wholly in Calcutta but included the effect of the release on the Bombay property (c) In a contract of insurance of goods made in Rangoon and providing for payment at Rangoon the Rangoon High Court held that the cause of action is at Rangoon and not at the place where the goods were destroyed or damaged (d) But the Bombay High Court has dissented from this case on the ground that the destruction or damage of the goods is part of the cause of action and in the case of a life assurance has held that part of the cause of action arises at the place where the death occurs (e) A suit for restitution of conjugal rights may be brought in the Court of the place where the husband resides, or it may be brought in the Court of the place where the wife resides (f) A suit by a guardian for the custody of his ward removed by the defendant from Allahabad to Lahore may be brought in the Court at Lahore or it may be brought in the Court at Allahabad (g) A suit for damages for infringement of a trade mark may be brought in the Court of the place where the defendant resides or in the Court of the place where the question whether that or some other place is the place of business of the company is in each case a pure question of fact to be determined by the course of business and trading (w). P. & A. Co. v. The Eastern (1880) 11 B.L.R. 100. Offices in fifty different jurisdictions and it is by the course of business that the place of business is determined in respect of a cause of action arising there (x).

Suit against non resident foreigners. The cause of action may arise against a non resident foreigner on a cause of action which arose within the territory (y). As already stated the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner resident within the limits of its jurisdiction, but a foreigner who has accrued abroad (z). A foreigner is not exempt from the jurisdiction of Indian Courts (a). If a foreigner resides or himself carries on business or works for gain, in British India, it is clear that he is amenable to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts. But what if a foreigner does not reside or carry on business or personally work for gain, in British India, and

- (1) the cause of action arises within the local limits of a British Court?
- (2) the cause of action arises without British India but the foreigner carries on business through his agent within the local limits of a British Court?

As to case (1), it is settled that a non resident foreigner who carries on business in a protected Native State, may be sued in the Court of British India if the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction of such Court (b). Thus if A, a native of the State of Sangli and residing at Sangli, borrows money from B at P. & A. Co., and fails to recover the money in the Kolgaum Court, for the cause of action arises there.

As to case (2), the High Court of Bombay in one case held that where the cause of action arose in Bombay, it had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner who did not reside in Bombay, but carried on business through an agent in Bombay (c). But that decision was disapproved in the later case of Thyagaraj v. Kassar (d). The point arose in a later case before the Privy Council, but it was not open (e). The Madras High Court has held that the expression "carrying on business" in cl. 12 of the Letters Patent includes carrying on business through an agent in India by foreigners living outside jurisdiction (f).

21. [New.] No objection as to the place of business of the defendant may be allowed by any appellate Court unless such objection was taken in the Court of first instance at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where the objection was taken at or before such settlement, and unless there has been a manifest and inequitable failure of justice.

question whether that or some other place is the principal place of business of the company is in each case a pure question of fact to be determined upon a scrutiny of the course of business and trading (w). But a Company may have subordinate or branch offices in fifty different jurisdictions and it may be sued in any one of such jurisdictions in respect of a cause of action arising there (x).

Suit against non resident foreigners—The Court has no jurisdiction in a suit against a non resident foreigner on a cause of action which arose wholly without British territory (y). As already stated the Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner resident within the limits of its jurisdiction in respect of a cause of action that has accrued abroad (z). A foreigner is not exempt from the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts (a). If a foreigner resides, or himself carries on business, or personally works for gain, in British India, it is clear that he is amenable to the jurisdiction of British Indian Courts. As to case (1), it is settled that a non resident foreigner, who is a subject of a protected Native State, may be sued in the Court of British India, if the cause of action arises within the jurisdiction of such Court (b). Thus if A, a subject of the Native State of Sangli and residing at Sangli, borrows money from B at Belgaum, B may sue A for recovery of the money in the Belgaum Court, for the cause of action arises at Belgaum.

As to case (2), the High Court of Bombay in one case held that where no part of the cause of action arose in Bombay, it had no jurisdiction to entertain a suit against a foreigner who did not reside in Bombay, but carried on business through an agent in Bombay (c). But that decision was disapproved in the later case of Girdhar v Kassigar (d). The point arose in a later case before the Privy Council, but it was left open (e). The Madras High Court has held that the expression "carrying on business" in cl. 12 of the Letters Patent includes carrying on business through an agent in British India by foreigners living outside jurisdiction (f).

Chartered High Courts—This section does not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their original jurisdiction (g)

Meaning of "jurisdiction"—"By jurisdiction is meant the authority which a Court has to decide matters that are litigated before it or to take cognizance of matters presented in a formal way for its decision The limits of this authority are imposed by the statute, charter, or commission under which the Court is constituted and may be extended or restricted by the like means If no restriction or limit is imposed the jurisdiction is said to be unlimited ' (h)

A limitation may be (1) as to the subject matter, (2) as to person, (3) as to the pecuniary value of the suit, or (4) as to place or it may partake of two or more of these characteristics (i)

(1) Subject matter—Subject matter depends upon the nature of the cause of action and the relief prayed for Thus a Presidency Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain certain suits such as suits for the recovery or partition of immovable property suits for the foreclosure or redemption of a mortgage of immovable property, suits for compensation for defamation, suits for dissolution of partnership, etc, see the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 15 of 1882, s 19 These and certain other suits are also excepted from the cognizance of a Provincial Small Cause Court, see Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887, s 15 If a Presidency Small Cause Court or a Provincial Small Cause Court entertains a suit which is excluded from its cognizance, its decree is a nullity See also Bombay Civil Courts Act 14 of 1869, s 28 A, and Bengal, N W P, and Assam Civil Courts Act 12 of 1887, s 23

(2) Person—The general rule as stated by Garth, C J, in Olin v Lavezso (j) is that civil Courts here as in England have jurisdiction to try all civil suits against all persons of any nationality within the local limits of their jurisdiction Independent foreign sovereigns are exempt but may submit themselves to jurisdiction by appearance to a writ (k) As to Princes, Chiefs and Ambassadors, see sec 86

(3) Pecuniary value—Throughout British India there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts in different local areas These have been set forth in the notes to sec 15 where the principles regulating pecuniary jurisdiction are also discussed A suit may be over valued and instituted in a Court of a higher grade or it may be under valued and instituted in a Court of a lower grade, but section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887 now provides that an objection on this ground shall not be entertained by an Appellate or Revisional Court unless, (1) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or (2) the Appellate or Revisional Court is satisfied that the over valuation or under valuation has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on its merits (l)

(4) Place of suing—This phrase may refer to territorial jurisdiction in its wider sense as where the suit is not cognizable by a British Indian Court being for instance a suit for partition of land outside British India, or in its narrower sense of the local venue in British India for suits cognizable by British Indian Courts The words are used in this section in this latter sense with reference to the local venue for which rules have been enacted in the preceding sections 15 to 20 (m) These sections, it will be observed, occur under the heading "Place of suing"

Waiver of objection to jurisdiction—It is a fundamental rule that a judgment of a Court without jurisdiction is a nullity (n) "Where, by reason of any limitation imposed by statute, charter, or commission, a Court is without jurisdiction to entertain any particular action or matter, neither the acquiescence nor the express consent of the parties can confer jurisdiction upon the Court nor can consent give a Court jurisdiction if a condition which goes to the jurisdiction has not been performed or fulfilled Where a limited Court takes upon itself to exercise a jurisdiction it does not possess, its decision amounts to nothing (o) The general rule therefore is that consent cannot give jurisdiction, and want of jurisdiction cannot be waived There is an apparent conflict in the reported cases on this subject owing to the failure to keep clearly in view the distinction between want of jurisdiction and irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction, or to use the phrase of Mookerjee J, irregularity in the assumption of jurisdiction (p) The leading case on the subject is Ledgard v Bull (q) decided by the Privy Council in 1886 The suit was for damages and an injunction for infringement of a patent Under the Patents and Designs Act such a suit can only be brought in a District Court, but it was brought in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had no jurisdiction to entertain it The suit was eventually transferred from the Subordinate Judge's Court to the District Court, and there heard and decided The defendant contended that an order for transfer of a suit from one Court to another under s 24 could not be made unless the suit had been brought in a Court having jurisdiction, but this contention was overruled. The same view was taken by the High Court on appeal The Judicial Committee held that the suit having been instituted in a Court which had no jurisdiction, no order of transfer could be made, but that the District Court being competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought, the defendant could waive the objection to the irregularities of its institution, but that he had not done so, and the decree of the District Court could not therefore stand and it ought to have been set aside by the High Court Lord Watson in delivering the judgment of the Board said —

"The District Judge was perfectly competent to entertain and try the suit if it were competently brought, and their Lordships do not doubt that, in such a case, a defendant may be barred, by his own conduct, from objecting to irregularities in the institution of the suit [But] when the Judge has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of a suit, the parties cannot, by their mutual consent, convert it into a proper judicial process, although they may constitute the Judge their arbiter, and be bound by his decision on the merits when these are submitted to him But there are numerous authorities which establish that when in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties without objection join issue, and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there were irregularities in the initial procedure, which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dismissal of the suit"

The principles laid down in Ledgard v Bull were reiterated by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Meenakshi Naidu v Subramania Sastri (r) That was a case in which the High Court of Madras had entertained an appeal from an adjudication from which no appeal was provided for by any enactment Their Lordships held that the decree of These two cases illustrate the distinction between want of jurisdiction and irregular exercise or assumption of jurisdiction. Irregular exercise or assumption may be waived as it might have been in Ledgard v Bull, and if a Court erroneously assumes jurisdiction to try a suit over which it has inherent jurisdiction its decree may be set aside but it cannot be treated as a nullity (s). But when the Court is not competent to entertain or try the suit there is a want of inherent jurisdiction which cannot be waived. But here again there are certain exceptions. If the Court has no jurisdiction owing to some privilege attaching to a party, the party may waive that privilege. Thus a defendant may waive his status as an agriculturist. Another exception is in the case of pecuniary jurisdiction enacted in section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act 7 of 1887. A third exception is this section as to the place of suing or the local venue of suits within the cognizance of British Indian Courts.

On the other hand when the suit is one within the cognizance of British Indian Courts and the want of jurisdiction is only as to local venue under sections 15 to 20

the defect may be waived under this section. Thus if the defendant resides in the jurisdiction of Court A and he is sued in Court B on the allegation that he resides in its jurisdiction, he cannot raise this objection for the first time in appeal (x), nor can he in a subsequent suit set aside the decree as a nullity (y). If a suit on a mortgage of land in the jurisdiction of Court B is instituted in Court A, contrary to the provisions of section 16, and the defendant does not object, the decree is not a nullity (z). So also when the territorial jurisdiction of the Court is altered by a notification during the pendency of the suit (a).

"Objection as to place of suing" when to be taken.—The general rule is that an objection to jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the proceedings provided there are materials on the record to sustain it (b). It may be taken for the first time in appeal or in second appeal (c), or in revision (d), or after remand in second appeal (e), or in appeal to the Privy Council provided the objection is patent on the face of the proceedings (f). This section which is framed on the analogy of section 11 of the Suits Valuation Act is an exception to this general rule.

The section does not refer to the Court of first instance and in the Court of first instance the objection may be taken at any time before the final judgment (g). But under the section a Court of Appeal or Revision will not entertain the objection unless it has been taken at the earliest possible opportunity in the Court of first instance, and if issues have been settled, at or before the settlement of issues. Even then the Court of Appeal or Revision will not allow the objection unless there has been a failure of justice. If the objection is raised for the first time in appeal or revision it is excluded by the terms of the section (h). But in a case where a Court of Small Causes set aside an ex parte decree, although the application should have been made to the Munsiff of another Court, the objection was entertained in revision on the ground that it referred not only to the place of suing but to the nature of the Court itself (i).

Section 21 and execution proceedings.—The waiver extends to execution proceedings and the judgment debtor cannot object to the validity of the decree in execution proceedings. In Zamindar of Ettiyapuram v Chidambaram (j) Wallis, J., said "The effect of the section in my opinion is that objections which the appellate or revisional Court is thereby precluded from allowing must be considered cured for all purposes unless taken before the passing of the decree of the original Court. The ordinary way of questioning a decree passed without jurisdiction is on appeal or revision, and if this is forbidden, a Court of first instance cannot in execution do that which the appellate or revisional Court is precluded from doing." But it is difficult where after the passing of a preliminary mortgage decree, the Court which passes it ceases to have territorial jurisdiction over any of the mortgaged properties. In such a case failure on the part of the mortgagor to object to the passing of the final decree, precludes him from disputing the validity of the decree, but not from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court to order a sale (k).

When a Court executing a decree transferred to it attached and sold properties after territorial jurisdiction had been withdrawn from it, the Madras High Court held that the judgment debtor's failure to object estopped him from questioning the validity of the sale, but that there was no estoppel against a subsequent purchaser of the same property at a sale held in execution of a decree passed against the same judgment debtor in another suit, for the estoppel of the judgment debtor did not operate against such purchaser (l). The same Court has also held that if a Court continues to execute a decree against immovable property after territorial jurisdiction has been withdrawn from it, the judgment debtor's failure to object will preclude him from raising the point in appeal (m).

Section 21 and new suit—The Madras (n) and Lahore (o) High Courts have held that if the defendant does not object to jurisdiction and a decree is passed against him he cannot in a subsequent suit set aside the decree for want of jurisdiction. But the Allahabad High Court considers that it is not legitimate to extend the bar of s. 21 beyond the limits provided by the section, and that in such a case the plaintiff is entitled to maintain an independent suit for the avoidance of the decree (p). In a Calcutta case (q) a landlord filed a suit for rent and ejectment under sec 66 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and obtained a decree in execution of which the tenure was sold and purchased by himself. The land was situate in the jurisdiction of another Court but the defendant had raised no objection. When the landlord went to take possession the tenant defendant filed a suit for a declaration that the decree had been passed and the sale held without jurisdiction. It was contended for the landlord that the sale was validated by section 21, but this contention was overruled. Mookerjee, J., said that section 21 is an exception to the well established rule that where a Court has no inherent jurisdiction over the subject matter of the suit its decree is a nullity, even though the parties may have consented to jurisdiction of the Court. This exception cannot obviously be so interpreted as to have a wider application than what is justified by its terms. It is impossible for us to hold that section 21 debars the defendant from questioning the validity of the execution sale which is the root of the title of the plaintiff. In the view taken by the learned judge the decree was validated by section 21 but the execution sale was a nullity. It is submitted however that the view taken by the Madras and Lahore High Courts is correct that when once the objection to jurisdiction is waived, under section 21, it is waived for all purposes.

Unless there has been a consequent failure of justice"—Even though
 "failure the appellate Court must go into the merits of the case and form an opinion upon the justice or otherwise of the decision of the 1st Court (s).

Remand—There is no question of territorial jurisdiction when a suit is remanded by a Court of Appeal, for jurisdiction then depends entirely upon the order of remand (t).

22. [S 22] Where a suit may be instituted in any one of two or more Courts and is instituted in one of such Courts, any defendant, after notice to the other parties, may, at the earliest possible opportunity and in all cases where issues are settled at or before such settlement, apply to have the suit transferred to another Court, and the Court to which such application is made, after considering the objections of the other parties (if any) shall determine in which of the several Courts having jurisdiction the suit shall proceed

Power to transfer suits which may be instituted in more than one Court

Transfer where plaintiff has a choice of Courts—The power of transfer given by this section is not a general power as in section 24. It is limited to cases in sections 16 and 20 where plaintiff has the option to sue in more Courts than one (u). Prima facie plaintiff as arbitrarius litis has the right to select his own forum (v). That right is controlled by the power of transfer, but it is a right that ought not lightly to be interfered with (u).

Grounds of transfer—See note to section 24 under the same heading

Notice—The provisions of this section as to notice and time of application are mandatory (x). Notice must be given before application and to co-defendants as well as to the plaintiff

Stay of suit—Section 20 of the Code of 1882 provided for stay of proceedings in order to compel the plaintiff to take his case to another Court. This has been omitted as sufficient provision has been made by the power of transfer in sections 22 to 24. But the Court has an inherent jurisdiction to stay any suit which is an abuse of its process. Whether the institution of the suit in a particular Court is an abuse of the process of that Court is a question of fact. In a suit filed in the Bombay High Court the fact that both the parties and the witnesses of the defendants were residents of Wardha in the Central Provinces was held not to justify an order for the stay of the suit (y). The High Court has also power to stay a suit in another Court. See note under O 39 r 1.

23. [Ss 22, 23, 24] (1) Where the several Courts having jurisdiction are subordinate to the same Appellate Court, an application under section 22 shall be made to the Appellate Court

(3) Where such Courts are subordinate to different High Courts, the application shall be made to the High Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the Court in which the suit is brought is situate

Chartered High Courts—Sections 22 and 23 do not apply to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction (z)

Subordinate Courts—Subordination of Court is regulated by sec 3. A Court of subordinate Judge is subordinate to the District Court no matter what the forum of appeal may be in the particular case for the transfer of which application is made (a)

Different High Courts—If suits between the same parties are instituted in Courts subordinate to different High Courts, either High Court can transfer the suit from the Court which is subordinate to it (b). A Judge on the Original Side of the High Court is not a Court subordinate to the High Court and a Bench of the High Court cannot entertain an application for the transfer of a suit from him to another Court (c)

24. [S 25] (1) On the application of any of the parties and after notice to the parties and after hearing such of them as desire to be heard, or of its own motion without such notice the High Court or the District Court may at any stage—

(a) transfer any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending before it for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or

(b) withdraw any suit, appeal or other proceeding pending in any Court subordinate to it, and

(i) try or dispose of the same, or

(ii) transfer the same for trial or disposal to any Court subordinate to it and competent to try or dispose of the same, or

(iii) retransfer the same for trial or disposal to the Court from which it was withdrawn

(2) Where any suit or proceeding has been transferred or withdrawn under sub section (1), the Court which thereafter tries such suit may, subject to any special directions in the case of an order of transfer, either re-try it or proceed from the point at which it was transferred or withdrawn

(3) For the purposes of this section, Courts of Additional and Assistant Judges shall be deemed to be subordinate to the District Court.

(4) The Court trying any suit transferred or withdrawn under this section from a Court of Small Causes shall, for the purposes of such suit, be deemed to be a Court of Small Causes

Alterations in the section—These have been noted in their appropriate places in the commentary below

Chartered High Courts—This section applies to Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their ordinary original civil jurisdiction (d)

Form—For form of notice of application, see App H, form no 2

Jurisdiction—An order for the transfer of a suit from one Court to another cannot be made under this section unless the suit has been in the first instance brought in a Court that has jurisdiction to try it. But if, after the transfer is made, the parties without objection join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the order of transfer cannot subsequently be impeached (e). The same rule applies to appeals (f). See note "Waiver of objection to jurisdiction" under sec 21. Conversely a suit cannot be transferred to a Court which has not jurisdiction (other than territorial jurisdiction) to try it (g). Thus a High Court cannot transfer to a District Court an insolvency petition presented to it under the Presidency-towns Insolvency Act (h). Nor can a District Court transfer a suit from one subordinate Court to another subordinate Court which has been newly created and empowered to try subsequently instituted suits (i). But it is not necessary that the Court to which a suit is transferred, should have concurrent territorial jurisdiction and a High Court or District Court may transfer a suit from one subordinate Court to another subordinate Court which has pecuniary jurisdiction although it may not have territorial jurisdiction to try the suit (j).

General power of transfer—This section gives a general power of transfer of all suits, appeals and other proceedings and is not limited like section 22 to suits in which the plaintiff has the option of suing in more than one Court. It may be exercised at any stage of the proceeding and even suo motu without an application (*j*1).

Grounds of transfer.—As stated in the notes on section 22 the plaintiff as arbiter litis or dominus litis has the right to choose his own forum or rather any forum the law allows him. This right is subject to control under sections 22 to 24. The burden lies on the applicant to make out a strong case for a transfer. A mere balance of convenience in favour of proceedings in another Court is not a sufficient ground (k), though it is a relevant consideration (l). As a general rule the Court should not interfere unless the expenses and difficulties of the trial would be so great as to lead to injustice or the suit has been filed in a particular Court for the purpose of working injustice (m). What the Court has to consider is whether the applicant has made out

a case to justify it in closing the doors of the Court in which the suit is brought to the plaintiff and leaving him to seek his remedy in another jurisdiction (n) Where in a suit for partition instituted in the Court of 24 Pargunnahs the parties were residents of Calcutta and the major portion of the immovable property was also situate in Calcutta, the suit was transferred to the original side of the High Court of Calcutta on the ground principally of convenience (o) In a suit to set aside certain deeds of gift executed by a deceased person whose heir the plaintiff claimed to be on the ground that the deceased was not of a sound mind and that the deeds were procured by undue influence, the High Court of Allahabad ordered the suit to be transferred to the Court of the place where the deeds were executed on the ground that the witnesses were residents of that place and that the defence must turn upon local evidence (p) Another ground of transfer is a pecuniary or other personal interest in the presiding Judge (q) or a reasonable apprehension of the litigant that he will not get a fair trial (r)

Notice—No notice is necessary if the Court acts suo motu If an application is made notice must be given by the Court and not by the party as in sec 22 The provision as to notice is imperative, and an order for transfer made without notice will be set aside (s) and so will an ex parte decree made by a Court to which the suit has been transferred without notice to the defendant (t) On the other hand the Madras High Court treats the matter of notice as one of practice and procedure and holds that notice may be waived (u) and that want of notice is an irregularity which does not invalidate the order of transfer (v)

"At any stage"—These words and the substitution of the word "pending" for "instituted" settle a doubt as to whether a suit could be transferred or withdrawn after the hearing had commenced The High Courts of Bombay, Madras, and Allahabad held that a suit could be transferred or withdrawn at any stage even after the hearing had commenced, and even in the course of execution proceedings (w) On the other hand the Calcutta High Court held that there was no power to interfere after the hearing had commenced and no power to transfer an execution proceeding (x) It is now clear that the former view is correct

"Pending before it"—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 it was held that a District Judge had no power to transfer to a subordinate Court a suit pending before himself (y) Clause (a) confers this power on District Courts and High Courts

District Court—District Court in this section means a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction An order of transfer under this section cannot therefore be made by an Assistant Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited (z)

Nagpur Court for that Court is not subordinate to it (a) A senior Subordinate Judge in the Punjab cannot transfer a case from his Court to that of a junior Subordinate Judge, for the latter is not subordinate to him (b)

Clause (a): "Suit."—The High Court of Allahabad has held that the word "suit" is not limited to proceedings in execution (c). This is no doubt correct for an

The words "dispose of" have been added evidently with reference to miscellaneous proceedings.

Clause (b) . " Other proceedings."—The words "other proceedings" include an insolvency petition (d), but not a proceeding under sec 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (e) The Madras High Court has held that a District Court has power under this clause to withdraw to its own file proceedings in execution transmitted by it to a subordinate Court (f)

Competent Court.—The Court to which a suit is transferred must possess pecuniary jurisdiction but it is not necessary that it should have territorial jurisdiction (g) The Chief Court of Oudh has held that it is not necessary that the transferee Court should have territorial jurisdiction, and that competence means intrinsic competence and refers to the subject matter of the case and its pecuniary value (g1) If a suit pending in a Small Cause Court is transferred to a Subordinate Judge's Court it must be within the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge. If the Subordinate Judge is invested with Small Cause Court powers, it matters not that those powers fall short of the value of the suit Thus has been decided by the Bombay High Court (h) dissenting from a Madras decision which made the competency of the Court depend upon its Small Cause Court powers (i)

Illustration

A suit for Rs 900 is pending in the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad Application is made to transfer it to the Court of the second class Sub judge at Ahmedabad whose jurisdiction extends to Rs 5,000, but who is invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs 300 The High Court has power to make the transfer, for the suit is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the second class Sub judge Parshotumdas v Bhagubhai (1932) 56 Bom 387, 139 I C 194, ('32) A B 486.

Again the competency of the Court is not affected by the circumstance that the Small Cause Court has under sec 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act preferential jurisdiction, and a suit may be transferred from a Small Cause Court to the Court of a Subordinate Judge having jurisdiction within the same local limits (j) But the High Court has no power to transfer an insolvency petition made under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, and pending before a Subordinate Judge to the Judge of the High Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction (k)

Re-transfer.—Clause (b) (iii) gives power to re transfer a suit to the Court from which it was withdrawn. There was no such power in the Code of 1882 and the cases in foot note (l) are obsolete

a case to justify it in closing the doors of the Court in which the suit is brought to the plaintiff and leaving him to seek his remedy in another jurisdiction (n) Where in a suit for partition instituted in the Court of 24 Pergunnahs the parties were residents of Calcutta and the major portion of the immovable property was also situate in Calcutta, the suit was transferred to the original side of the High Court of Calcutta on the ground principally of convenience (o) In a suit to set aside certain deeds of gift executed by a deceased person whose heir the plaintiff claimed to be on the ground that the deceased was not of a sound mind and that the deeds were procured by undue influence, the High Court of Allahabad ordered the suit to be transferred to the Court of the place where the deeds were executed on the ground that the witnesses were residents of that place and that the defence must turn upon local evidence (p) Another ground of transfer is a pecuniary or other personal interest in the presiding Judge (q) or a reasonable apprehension of the litigant that he will not get a fair trial (r)

Notice—No notice is necessary if the Court acts suo motu. If an application is made notice must be given by the Court and not by the party as in sec 22. The provision as to notice is imperative, and an order for transfer made without notice will be set aside (s) and so will an ex parte decree made by a Court to which the suit has been transferred without notice to the defendant (t) On the other hand the Madras High Court treats the matter of notice as one of practice and procedure and holds that notice may be waived (u) and that want of notice is an irregularity which does not invalidate the order of transfer (v)

"At any stage"—These words and the substitution of the word "pending" for instituted settle a doubt as to whether a suit could be transferred or withdrawn after the hearing had commenced. The High Courts of Bombay, Madras, and Allahabad held that a suit could be transferred or withdrawn at any stage even after the hearing had commenced, and even in the course of execution proceedings (w) On the other hand the Calcutta High Court held that there was no power to interfere after the hearing had commenced and no power to transfer an execution proceeding (x) It is now clear that the former view is correct.

"Pending before it"—Under the corresponding section of the Code of 1892 it was held that a District Judge had no power to transfer to a subordinate Court a suit pending before himself (y) Clause (a) confers this power on District Courts and High Courts.

District Court—District Court in this section means a Court of unlimited pecuniary jurisdiction. An order of transfer under this section cannot therefore be made by an Assistant Judge whose pecuniary jurisdiction is limited (z)

Clause (a). "Court subordinate to it"—A decree for dissolution of marriage under the Indian Divorce Act 4 of 1869, made by the Divisional Judge of Nagpur, is subject to confirmation by the High Court of Bombay, but after the Bombay High Court has confirmed the decree, an application for alimony must be made to the Court at Nagpur. The Bombay High Court cannot entertain it, nor can it transfer the application to the

Nagpur Court for that Court is not subordinate to it (a) A senior Subordinate Judge in the Punjab cannot transfer a case from his Court to that of a junior Subordinate Judge, for the latter is not subordinate to him (b)

Clause (a). "Suit."—The High Court of Allahabad has held that the word 'suit' in this clause includes proceedings in execution (c) This is no doubt correct for an execution proceeding is a proceeding in a suit, and would therefore not be included in the expression "other proceeding" which must therefore have the same meaning as 'all proceedings in any Court of civil justice' in section 141 See note on that section The words 'dispose of' have been added evidently with reference to miscellaneous proceedings.

Clause (b). "Other proceedings"—The words "other proceedings" include an insolvency petition (d), but not a proceeding under sec 476 of the Code of Criminal Procedure (e) The Madras High Court has held that a District Court has power under this clause to withdraw to its own file proceedings in execution transmitted by it to a subordinate Court (f)

Competent Court—The Court to which a suit is transferred must possess pecuniary jurisdiction but it is not necessary that it should have territorial jurisdiction (g) The Chief Court of Oudh has held that it is not necessary that the transferee Court should have territorial jurisdiction, and that competence means intrinsic competence and refers to the subject matter of the case and its pecuniary value (g1) If a suit pending in a Small Cause Court is transferred to a Subordinate Judge's Court it must be within the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge If the Subordinate Judge is invested with Small Cause Court powers, it matters not that those powers fall short of the value of the suit This has been decided by the Bombay High Court (h) dissenting from a Madras decision which made the competency of the Court depend upon its Small Cause Court powers (i)

Illustration

A suit for Rs 900 is pending in the Small Cause Court at Ahmedabad Application is made to transfer it to the Court of the second class Sub judge at Ahmedabad whose jurisdiction extends to Rs 5000, but who is invested with Small Cause Court powers up to Rs 300 The High Court has power to make the transfer, for the suit is within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the second class Sub judge Parshotumdas v Bhagubhai (1932) 56 Bom. 387, 139 I C 194, (1932) A B 486

Again the competency of the Court is not affected by the circumstance that the Small Cause Court has under sec 16 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act preferential jurisdiction, and a suit may be transferred from a Small Cause Court to the Court of a Subordinate Judge having jurisdiction within the same local limits (j) But the High Court has no power to transfer an insolvency petition made under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, and pending before a Subordinate Judge to the Judge of the High Court exercising insolvency jurisdiction (k)

Sub section (4) Court of Small Causes—The High Courts of Allahabad (m), Madras (n), and Patna (o) and latterly also the High Courts of Bombay (p) and Calcutta (q), are agreed that the expression "Court of Small Causes" in sub sec (4) includes a Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes. The High Courts of Bombay (r), and Calcutta (s), at one time held that it was restricted to a Court established under Act 9 of 1887 but those decisions are no longer law.

The provisions of sub section (4) do not constitute the Court to which the suit is transferred a Small Cause Court (t). It derives jurisdiction to try the suit as a Small Cause suit from sec 24 (4) (u), and is deemed to be a Small Cause Court for the purposes of the suit (v) with the result that its procedure in the trial of the suit is governed by the provisions of Act 9 of 1887 (w) and no appeal lies if there is no appeal under that Act (x). The procedure will be that of a Small Cause Court even though the District Judge transferring the suit directs it to be tried as a regular suit, for he has no jurisdiction to give such a direction (y). The decree will not operate as res judicata in a suit which the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to entertain (z). The same principles apply where on the retirement or transfer of a Subordinate Judge having Small Cause Court powers, the suit is transferred by order of the District Judge to another Judge not invested with Small Cause Court jurisdiction, and no appeal will lie from a decree passed by the latter Judge (a). But if no order of transfers is made, and if on the transfer of a munsiff vested with Small Cause Court powers his successor, who is not so invested, takes cognizance of the suit under sec 35 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act and tries it as a regular suit, an appeal will lie (b).

(2) The law applicable to any suit, appeal or proceeding so transferred shall be the law which the Court in which the suit, appeal or proceeding was originally instituted ought to have applied to such case.

The object of this section is to empower the Governor General in Council to transfer cases from one High Court to another under certain circumstances. The section proceeds on the analogy of sec. 527 of the Code of Criminal Procedure 1898.

INSTITUTION OF SUITS

26. [S 48] Every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

Institution of suits

Suit—A proceeding that does not commence with a plaint is not a suit (c). The word suit ordinarily means and apart from some context must be taken to mean a civil proceeding instituted by a plaint (c1). The essential provisions as to procedure in suits is enacted in sections 6 to 30 A. Details have been relegated to the rules of procedure in the first Schedule. For institution of suits see O 4 r 1.

Changes introduced by the section—The words "or in such other manner as may be prescribed" are new. No other manner of instituting suits has hitherto been prescribed.

Provided that the Courts issuing such summonses have been established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council, or that the Governor General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared the provisions of this section to apply to such Courts

By notification—For notifications issued under this section see General Statutory Rules and Orders

30. [New] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may, at any time, either of its own motion or on the application of any party,—

Power to order discovery and the like

(a) make such orders as may be necessary or reasonable in all matters relating to the delivery and answering of interrogatories, the admission of documents and facts, and the discovery, inspection, production, impounding and return of documents or other material objects producible as evidence,

(b) issue summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents or such other objects as aforesaid,

(c) order any fact to be proved by affidavit

31. [New] The provisions in sections 27, 28 and 29 shall apply to summonses to give evidence or to produce documents or other material objects

Summonses to witnesses

32. [New] The Court may compel the attendance of any person to whom a summons has been issued under section 30 and for that purpose may—

Penalty for default

(a) issue a warrant for his arrest,

(b) attach and sell his property,

(c) impose a fine upon him not exceeding five hundred rupees ;

(d) order him to furnish security for his appearance and in default commit him to the civil prison.

See O 16, rr 10 13, r 17, and r 21

"To whom a summons has been issued"—This section applies only if a summons has been issued. It does not apply where a person is merely ordered to produce a document (d)

JUDGMENT AND DECREE.

33. [S 198.] The Court, after the case has been heard, shall pronounce judgment, and on such judgment a decree shall follow.

Judgment and decree

See O 20, r 1

On such judgment a decree shall follow—Under this section it is imperative that a decree shall follow the judgment and as it is the duty of the Court to comply with the provisions of the law, the Court's failure to prepare a decree should not deprive a party of his right of appeal. The appeal should not be dismissed and the appellant should be allowed time to move the lower Court to prepare a decree (e)

INTEREST.

34. [S. 209.] (1) Where and in so far as a decree is for the payment of money, the Court may, in the decree, order interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable to be paid on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, in addition to any interest adjudged on such principal sum for any period prior to the institution of the suit, with further interest at such rate as the Court deems reasonable on the aggregate sum so adjudged, from the date of the decree to the date of payment, or to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit

Interest

(2) Where such a decree is silent with respect to the payment of further interest on such aggregate sum as aforesaid from the date of the decree to the date of payment or other earlier date, the Court shall be deemed to have refused such interest, and a separate suit therefor shall not lie

Scope of the section—This section applies only where the decree is for the payment of money. It does not apply when the decree is for the enforcement of a mortgage or charge. See notes below under the head Interest in suits for enforcement of mortgage." There is no analogy between interest awarded under this section and mesne profits (f)

The three divisions of interest—Interest that may be awarded to a plaintiff in a suit for money may be divided into three heads, according to the period for which it is allowed, namely—

- (1) interest accrued due prior to the institution of the suit on the principal sum adjudged (as distinguished from the principal sum claimed),
- (2) additional interest on the principal sum adjudged, from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, 'at such rate as the Court deems reasonable',
- (3) further interest on the aggregate sum adjudged, i.e., the principal sum plus interest, from the date of the decree (i) to the date of payment or (ii) to such earlier date as the Court thinks fit, "at such rate as the Court deems reasonable"

Interest up to date of suit is a matter of substantive law and the section does not refer to payment of interest under the first head (g) It applies only to the second and third heads

I Interest prior to the date of suit.—Interest antecedent to suit is not a matter of procedure but a brief note on the subject will not be out of place The law on the subject may be considered under the following two heads

- (1) where there is a stipulation for the payment of interest at a fixed rate,
- (2) where there is no stipulation at all for the payment of interest

1 If there is a stipulation for the rate of interest, the Court must allow that rate up to the date of the suit, however high it may be [Usury Laws Repeal Act 28 of 1855, s 2], subject to the two following exceptions (1) if the rate is penal, the Court may award interest at such rate as it deems reasonable [Indian Contract Act, 1872, s 74], and (2) even if the rate is not penal, the Court may reduce it if the interest is excessive and the transaction was substantially unfair [Usurious Loans Act 10 of 1918, s 3]

2 If there is no express stipulation for payment of interest, the plaintiff is not entitled to interest except in the following cases —

(i) Mercantile usage—Where it is allowed by mercantile usage (h), but such usage must be pleaded and proved (i)

(ii) Statutory right to interest.—Interest is payable where a right to it, or an authority for its allowance or payment, is conferred by statute Section 80 of the Negotiable Instruments Act 26 of 1881 provides that when no rate of interest is specified in a promissory note or bill of exchange, the Court shall, notwithstanding any agreement relating to interest between the parties, award interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date on which the amount claimed became due and payable Similarly the Interest Act 32 of 1839 enacts that where there is no stipulation to pay interest, but the amount claimed is a sum certain (as distinguished from unascertained damages), and is payable at a certain time by virtue of some "written instrument," the Court (j) may allow interest at a rate not exceeding the current rate of interest from the date on which the amount became payable If no time is fixed for the payment of the amount, the Court may award interest at the rate aforesaid from the time the creditor demands payment in writing intimating to the debtor that interest will be claimed from the date of such demand up to the date of payment The provisions of the Interest Act 32 of 1839 are in the main a reproduction of the provisions of Lord Tenterden's Act [3 and 4 Wm 4, c 42, s 48] The House of Lords in London, Chatham and Dover Railway Co v South Eastern Railway Co (1), the modern leading case on interest held that the 'sum certain' within the meaning of that Act must be a certain sum which is one absolutely and in all events due and not a mere provisional payment to be made by one party to the other

(m) Implied agreement—Where an agreement to pay interest can be implied from the course of dealing between the parties (l)

In the London, Chatham and Dover Railway Company's case, the House of Lords held that interest cannot be given by way of damages for detention of a debt

II Interest from date of suit to date of decree.—The rate of interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree is in the discretion of the Court (m), and this discretion is not excluded even if a fixed rate is mentioned in the contract as payable up to realization' (n) But though the rate of interest for the aforesaid period is discretionary, the Court should, in the exercise of that discretion, award interest at the contract rate, unless it would be inequitable to do so (o) The Court may under this head award interest in a suit for money, although interest is not specifically asked for in the plaint (p) [see O 7, r. 7]

It is well established that no interest can be allowed on damages for any period prior to the suit (q), but there is a conflict of decisions whether interest can be allowed under this section on damages from the date of the suit, it being held in some cases that it can be allowed (r), and in some that it cannot be allowed (s)

Where the High Court has refused to exercise its discretionary power to allow interest from date of suit, the Judicial Committee as a rule will not interfere (t)

III Interest from date of decree to date of payment.—The rate of interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment is also in the discretion of the Court The plaintiff getting the security of a decree has his interest reduced in the generality of cases" (u) Where the rate of interest charged and decreed was 24 per cent the Lahore High Court refused to allow interest after decree (v) If the Court awards interest from the date of the decree but no rate is specified, the decree holder will be entitled to interest at the Court rate, which is usually 6 per cent (w) But if no such interest is awarded by the decree, it will be deemed to have been refused (x), see sub sec (2) In a case decided by the Privy Council in 1878 it was held that when the decree is silent about future interest it cannot be recovered in execution proceedings

but the decree holder may by suit recover damages for the detention of the decretal amount (y) That was a case under the Code of 1839 Sec 193 of that Code which relates to interest did not contain any such provision as is contained in subsec (2) of the present section This provision was first introduced by Act 7 of 1888 However in cases decided under the present Code the Calcutta High Court allows interest by way of damages for wrongful detention of money due irrespective of the provisions of the Interest Act ()

Illustration of the above rules—A lends Rs 5000 to B to be repaid with interest at the rate of 18 per cent per annum. In a suit by A to recover the amount of the loan with interest at the rate aforesaid it is contended on behalf of B that the rate of interest is penal (Contract Act s 74) The Court finds that the rate of interest is not penal nor is the transaction substantially unfair Hence—

- (1) as regards interest [on Rs 5000] from the date of the loan to the date of the suit the Court must allow it at the contract rate that is at the rate of 18 per cent per annum. Usury Laws Repeal Act s. 2
- (2) as regards interest [on Rs 5000] from the date of the suit to the date of the decree the Court may allow it at the contract rate that is at the rate of 18 per cent per annum or it may in its discretion allow it at a lower rate or may disallow it altogether
- (3) as regards interest from the date of the decree to the date of payment on the aggregate sum adjudged [i.e. Rs 5000 plus the interest adjudged under the above two heads] the Court may allow interest at such rate as it deems reasonable This rate is usually 6 per cent As to interest on costs see s 30 cl (3)

Interest in mortgage suits—The law on the subject is now codified in O 34 r 11 The rate of interest in mortgage suits is determined by O 34 and not by this section (1)

Rule of damdupat—This is a rule of Hindu law according to which interest exceeding the amount of the principal sum cannot be recovered at any one time This rule is in force in the Bombay Presidency (a) including Sind (b) and in Berar (c) and in the presidency town of Calcutta (d) but it is not recognised outside that town (e) It is also not recognised in the Madras Presidency (f) The meaning of the rule is that interest must not exceed the principal so if a Hindu lends Rs 500 to another Hindu and the loan is not repaid till the interest amounts to Rs 600 the lender is not entitled to recover more than Rs 500 for principal and Rs 500 for interest But the Court may under this section award further interest to the lender from the date of the suit though the aggregate interest may thereby exceed Rs 500 The reason is that the rule of damdupat ceases to operate from the date of the suit (g) But this is entirely in the discretion of the Court (h) It has been held by the High Court of Madras that the rule of damdupat does not apply where interest is claimed under a mortgage governed by the Transfer of Property Act 1882 (i) A different view has been taken by

35. [Ss 218-221 Jud Act, 1890, s 5, R. S. C., O 55, r 1]

Costs

(1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid. The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such powers.

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reasons in writing.

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any rate not exceeding six per cent per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such.

Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed. Prescribed means by rules contained in, or made under the Act, see sec 2 (10) and (18). The following rules contain express provision as to costs—O 11 r 3 (costs of interrogatories), O 12 r 2 (proof of documents), O 21, r 72 (3) (application to set aside a sale), O 23, r 1 (3) (withdrawal of suit), O 24 r 4 (costs on payment into Court), O 12, rr 4 & 5 (next friends and guardians), O 33, rr 10 11 & 16 (pauper suits), O 35 r 1 (inter pleader suits), O 34 (mortgage suits). But nothing in the rules as to pauper suits limits the discretion of the Court under sec 35 to apportion costs (m). If a suit has been referred to arbitration and the award makes no provision as to costs the Court may make an order as to costs of the arbitration under Sch. II para 13 and may also make an order as to costs of the proceedings in Court with reference to the arbitration; but it is debarred by para 13 of Sch. II from making an order as to the costs of the suit prior to the reference (n).

The provisions of any law.—The discretion to award costs is limited by certain enactments e.g., the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act 15 of 1882 sec 22 (1); the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894 sec 27 (p).

Costs as penalty.—Costs cannot be imposed as a penalty besides the costs of suit (q). It is not according to law to give to a party by way of damages the costs as between attorney and client of the litigation in which the damages are recovered (r) The object of awarding cost is to indemnify a party against the expense of successfully vindicating his rights in Court (s) The section does not confer any disciplinary jurisdiction, and a legal practitioner cannot be ordered, personally to pay the costs of an application which is an abuse of the process of the Court (t) But a solicitor who purports to act for a non-existent party is personally liable to pay costs (u) As to compensatory costs in cases of false or vexatious claims or defences, see sec 35A below

"Costs of and incident to suits"—This expression includes not only costs of suits, but costs of applications in suits. If there has been an invalid reference to arbitration out of Court, the Court cannot make an order for costs incurred before the arbitrator as they are not costs of the suit (v) As to costs of applications, the Court may make an order directing either party to pay the costs of the other, or it may make no order as to costs or it may reserve costs or make costs, costs in the cause

Costs of this suit—The expression "costs of this suit" means all costs incurred in the suit. Therefore if one of the defendants is ordered to pay plaintiff's "costs of the suit" and no qualifying words are added the costs include costs which the plaintiff has incurred by impleading another defendant against whom the suit has been dismissed with costs (x)

The general order for costs of the suit does not displace a specific order for costs made on an application (y) If it is intended to supersede previous interlocutory orders for costs, that fact should be stated in the final decree (y) The practice of the Calcutta High Court is that orders for costs made by the Court of appeal during the progress of the suit are taxed forthwith and execution levied therefor, but interlocutory orders in the original Court await taxation at the final termination of the suit (z) In a consent decree, if the order as to costs is intended to supersede previous interlocutory orders as to costs, that fact should be stated specifically as one of the terms of the agreement, that the parties have agreed to abandon the rights which had already accrued to them under the previous orders of the Court (a) If the order is 'costs reserved' those costs remain to be dealt with at the hearing. If the order is 'costs costs in the cause,' the Bombay High Court at one time held that the Court had a discretion to deal with those costs in any manner it thought fit (b), in other words, costs costs in the cause stood on the same footing as costs reserved except that in the case of costs costs in the cause if nothing was said about those costs in the final judgment they were taken to be included in the costs of the suit (c) But these decisions are no longer law and it has now been held that where the costs of an application are made costs in the cause, the party to whom the costs of the suit are awarded is entitled as a matter of course to the costs of the application (d) If the order is 'costs to abide the result' the Court has a discretion to apportion costs at the hearing, but if the order is "costs to follow the event" or "costs to abide and follow the result" the Court has no discretion and the successful party is entitled to his costs (e)

Costs to be in the discretion of the Court—The section provides that the costs of suits and applications shall be in the discretion of the Court. Such discretion must be a judicial discretion to be exercised on legal principles, not by chance, medley, nor by caprice nor in temper (f) In the exercise of this discretion the Court is not confined to the consideration of the conduct of the parties in the actual litigation itself, but may also take into consideration matters which led up to and were the occasion of that litigation (g) The discretion conferred upon the Court by this section is very wide (h) Thus the Court may order the costs to be paid by the parties in definite proportions, or it may order one party to pay to the other a fixed sum in lieu of taxed costs (i) Similarly it may disallow costs to a successful plaintiff, as where the rate of interest claimed by the plaintiff and allowed to him under the Usury Laws Repeal Act (j) is usurious (k), or it may make a successful plaintiff pay the whole costs of the other side (l) It may also allow the expenses of witness though not summoned through the Court (m) But though the discretion conferred upon the Courts by this section is wide, it is a judicial discretion, and must be exercised on fixed principles, that is according to the rules of reason and justice not according to private opinion (n) or benevolence (o) or even sympathy (p) Where there are no materials before the Court on which it can exercise its discretion, it is not justified in depriving a successful party of his costs (q) The following are the leading rules on the subject —

1 Costs shall follow the event—The general rule is that costs shall follow the event unless the Court, for good reason, otherwise orders. This means that the successful party is entitled to costs unless he is guilty of misconduct or there is some other good cause for not awarding costs to him (r) The Court may not only consider the conduct of the party in the actual litigation, but the matters which led up to the litigation (s) A refusal to go to arbitration is no ground for refusing costs (t), nor is the fact that the plaintiff brought his action without previous notice to the defendant (u) When an offer of compromise is made which the Court considers proper for acceptance but it refused the Court as a general rule relieves the party making the offer from payment of costs incurred after the date of the offer but an offer which the Court considers insufficient is no bar to a plaintiff's right to costs (v) In an account suit costs generally follow the result of the account unless the defendant has falsely denied his liability to account (w) But if the right to claim partition is wrongly disputed the disputing party will be made liable for costs unnecessarily incurred (x) An assignee of a decree made respondent without his consent, but who actively supports the decree under appeal, will be made liable for costs of the appeal

but not of the lower Court (y) A successful party is not to be deprived of his costs merely because the suit proceeds ex parte (z) A successful defendant cannot be deprived of his costs merely because he refused before the filing of the suit to disclose the evidence by which he proposed to substantiate his defence (a) It has been held to be a good reason for depriving a successful respondent of his costs that the appeal was filed on the strength of a decision which was overruled after the filing of the appeal (b)

It has been held by the House of Lords that the expression "the costs shall follow the event" means that the party who on the whole succeeds in the action gets the general costs of the action, but where the action involves separate issues, whether arising under different causes of action or under one cause of action, the word "event" should be read distributively and the costs of any particular issue should go to the party who succeeds upon it. An issue, in this sense, need not go to the whole cause of action, but includes any issue which has a direct and definite event in defeating the claim to judgment in whole or in part. A sued B for 164*l* for the price of 34 bags of goat hair sold to B. B, by his defence, pleaded (1) that the goods were not according to sample and were consequently worth 24*l* less, (2) that there was an overcharge on the bags for 2*l* and (3) payment into Court of the balance. B succeeded on the first issue but failed on the second. The Court of first instance gave judgment for A for 2*l* beyond the amount paid into Court with costs. On appeal it was held by the House of Lords, reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal, that the issue as to quality (1st issue) was an 'event' within the meaning of the expression 'the cost shall follow the event', and that B was entitled to the costs of that issue (c)

2 Where a party successfully enforces a legal right and in no way misconducts himself, he is entitled to costs as of right (d). But if he acts oppressively he may be deprived of his costs though successful (e)

3 The fact that a successful defendant has set up the Gaming Act as an answer to the plaintiff's claim is not a good cause for depriving him of his costs (f). Nor is the fact that he has pleaded the Statute of Limitations (g)

4 If a plaintiff substantially succeeds, he is entitled to his costs, though he may not have got the precise form of relief he wanted (h) and even though the damages awarded to him have been reduced (i)

5 If a plaintiff recovers a less (but not a trifling less) amount than he claimed in the Plaint, his costs should be apportioned according to the amount recovered and not to the sum claimed (j). As to the rule in the Privy Council see the undernoted case (k). The proper mode of apportionment is to calculate the amount of the costs of the suit as laid and then divide the entire sum between the parties according as they have respectively succeeded or failed (l)

6 Where a plaintiff succeeds on part of his claim, but fails on the most important and expensive heads of controversy, he may be made to pay the whole costs of the suit to the defendant (m)

7 Everything which increases the litigation and the costs and which places on the defendant a burden which he ought not to bear in the litigation is a perfectly good cause for depriving the plaintiff of costs (n) A successful party will be deprived of the costs of issues which he has unnecessarily raised (o)

9 A person wrongfully made a party should get his costs (q)

10 Where both the parties advanced pleas far in excess of their legal rights each party will be made to bear his own costs (r)

11 Separate costs should not be allowed to defendants if the defence is common to all, or their interests are the same (s)

12 Where two defendants join in defending an action, and judgment is entered for one and against the other, the successful defendant is prima facie entitled to receive from the plaintiff half the costs incurred in the joint defence (t)

13 Where two plaintiffs join in one action, claiming for separate and distinct causes of action, and judgment is entered in favour of one plaintiff and against the other, the successful plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendant the whole of his general costs of the action, and the defendant is entitled to recover from the unsuccessful plaintiff the costs occasioned by his joinder as plaintiff (u)

14 Where the decree of the lower Court is confirmed by the appellate Court the mere fact that the grounds upon which the confirmation proceeds are not the same as the ratio decidendi of the Court below is no ground for departing from the rule that, the costs shall follow the event (v)

15 Where a third party with no sufficient reason appears and defends an action separately, he must bear the costs of so doing, even though the plaintiff is unsuccessful in the action (w)

Co defendants—The Court may order one defendant to pay the costs of another defendant (z) In a suit against a partnership of several partners some of whom admitted and some of whom denied the partnership, those who denied were ordered to pay the costs of those who admitted (a)

Discretion not to be delegated—The discretion given to the Court under this section cannot be delegated to the Taxing Officer (b)

Costs against person not a party to suit—Under the Code of 1882 it was held that an order for costs cannot be made against a person who is not a party to the suit (c) The decision, however, turned upon the phrase 'party to the suit' which is omitted in the present section A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has observed that the omission is significant and that the present section has a wider scope (d) But, apart from cases where a next friend has been made liable for costs, there is no reported decision in which an order has been made for costs against a person not a party to the suit Persons interested on whose behalf a suit is brought under O 1, r 8, cannot be ordered to pay costs (e) As regards an action for costs against a third person on the ground that he was the mover of and had an interest in the suit it has been held by the Privy Council that such an action cannot be maintained in the absence of malice and want of probable cause (f)

"Out of what property"—The Court is not bound to order costs to be paid out of the estate Such an order is generally made in favour of trustees and in probate suits when the difficulty of construction is caused by the testator (g)

Costs where relief is claimed against defendants in the alternative—See note under the same head to O 1, r 3

No separate suit for costs—Where a Court has jurisdiction to deal with the question of costs, no separate suit will lie to recover costs, but where it has no jurisdiction to order costs, and costs are incurred they may be made the subject of consideration as to damages in a subsequent suit (h)

Sub section (2).—If the Court does not abide by the rule that costs should follow the event, it should record its reasons (i)

Costs disallowed when delay arises in appeals to the Privy Council—The Privy Council have said that litigants should use all speed to bring their cases to trial and make this injunction effectual by disallowing costs in case of delay in appeals to the Privy Council (j)

Sub section (3).—The Court may allow interest on costs, but if the decree is silent as to interest, it cannot be given in execution (4)

Whether an appeal lies for costs only.—Decisions of a Court of law fall into three classes, namely—

I Decrees [Every decree is appealable (s 96)]

II Appealable orders [s 104]

III Non appealable orders [s 105]

I It is settled that an appeal lies for costs only when the costs are awarded by a 'decree' of the order as to costs involves a question of principle, but it is not settled whether such an appeal lies if no question of principle is involved—A decree contains—

(1) a decision on the rights of parties, hereinafter called item No 1—and

(2) a direction as to costs, hereinafter called item No 2

A party, while appealing from item No 1 or any part thereof, may appeal also from item No 2 He may at the hearing abandon the appeal from item No 1 and may proceed with the appeal from item No 2 (1) But can he appeal from item No 2 alone without appealing from item No 1? In other words, does an appeal lie on a matter of costs only?

All the High Courts are agreed that such an appeal does lie—

(1) where the order as to costs involves a matter of principle (m), as where a formal party to a suit against whom no relief is claimed is made to pay the costs of the suit (n), or

(2) where there has been no real exercise of discretion in making the order as to costs. This may happen when a successful party is deprived of his costs (o) or is made to pay the costs of the losing party (p) If the discretion was exercised in fact, the appellate Court would not interfere merely because it would itself have exercised the discretion differently (q),

(3) where the order as to costs proceeds upon a misapprehension of fact or law (r)

For brevity's sake we shall describe all the three cases as cases where a question of "principle" is involved We may therefore say that it is settled law that an appeal lies for costs only where the order as to costs involves a question of principle But it is not settled whether an appeal lies for costs only, where no question of principle is involved It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that no appeal lies on a question of costs unless there is a question of principle involved (s) On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Bombay that an appeal will lie for costs only whether the order as to costs involves a question of principle or not (t) The ground of the Bombay decisions is that every decree being appealable, any part of it is appealable, though it be the part relating to costs, whether there is a matter of principle involved or not. But even according to the Bombay decisions, though an appeal may lie for costs only, the appellate Court will not as a rule vary or set aside the order of the lower Court as to costs, unless there is a principle involved and the principle has been violated.

Does a second appeal lie on a matter of costs only? It has been held that it does, provided there is a question of law or principle involved (u), see s. 100, cl. (a).

II Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in an 'appealable order'—The

s. 104 see s. 104 (2)

III Appeal from a direction as to costs contained in a "non appealable order"—Since no appeal lies from a non appealable order, no appeal can lie from a direction as to costs contained in such order. Thus if an order is made adjourning the hearing of a suit and one of the parties is directed to pay the costs occasioned by the application for adjournment he cannot appeal from the direction as to costs, for an order adjourning the hearing of a suit is not an appealable order, it not being included in s. 104 (1) below (v).

Letters Patent appeal—An order as to costs is not a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent, and is not appealable as such (x).

Costs against Secretary of State—The Secretary of State is in an unsuccessful litigation liable to pay costs like any other unsuccessful party (y).

Matrimonial causes—It is customary in the Divorce Division of the Calcutta High Court to direct a respondent husband to secure the costs of a petitioner's wife. But if the parties are members of the Jewish community and the cause is tried in the original civil jurisdiction of the High Court and neither clause 35 of the Letters Patent nor the Divorce Act applies, then s. 35 of the Code will not justify such an order (z).

Suit for contribution towards costs—A defendant is not entitled as against a co defendant to contribution in respect of costs to which both are liable unless there be some equity existing between him and the co defendant (a).

Review of taxation—The Court will always interfere and entertain a review of taxation where a question of principle is involved, but the Court is generally unwilling to interfere where it is a question whether the master exercised his discretion properly, or if it is only a question of the amount to be allowed (b). But the discretion of the master is not final even on a question of quantum for he is not at liberty to lay down a scale for discretionary charges which are out of all proportion to the work done (c). If any point of principle is to be taken upon a review of taxation the point of principle must have been properly raised in writing delivered to the other party and carried in to the taxing master, and this is a condition precedent to the right to apply for a review to the Judge in Chambers (d).

In taxation between party and party only those costs are allowed which are strictly necessary for the purpose of the prosecution of the litigation, while in taxation between attorney and client a party is allowed as many of the charges which he would have been compelled to pay to his own solicitor as being costs of the suit which fair justice to the other party would permit. If a solicitor incurs unusual or extraordinary expenses in excess of what would be allowed in taxation between party and party without express authority from his client such costs may be disallowed in taxation between attorney and client. In taxation between attorney and client separate counsel for two sets of defendants will be disallowed if the defences were not diverse or if there was a reasonable probability of there being a substantial difference between the defences (e) Rule 546 of the Bombay High Court Rules which disallows costs not necessary or proper for the attainment of justice or defending the rights of the party refers to party and party costs (f) Rule 559 of the same rules provides that in case the solicitor's bill is reduced in taxation by a sixth the solicitor shall pay all costs whatever attending the taxation. This is a penalty for an exaggerated bill of costs, but the Court has a discretion in exceptional cases to make a different order (g)

objector, false or vexatious to the knowledge of the party by whom it has been put forward, and if thereafter, as against the objector, such claim or defence is disallowed, abandoned or withdrawn in whole or in part, the Court, if the objection has been taken at the earliest opportunity and if it is satisfied of the justice thereof, may, after recording its reasons for holding such claim or defence to be false or vexatious, make an order for the payment to the objector, by the party by whom such claim or defence has been put forward, of costs by way of compensation

(2) No Court shall make any such order for the payment of an amount exceeding one thousand rupees or exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction, whichever amount is less

Provided that where the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of any Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887 and not being a Court constituted under that Act are less than two hundred and fifty rupees, the High Court may empower such Court to award as costs under this section any amount not exceeding two hundred and fifty rupees and not exceeding those limits by more than one hundred rupees

(3) No person against whom an order has been made under this section shall, by reason thereof, be exempted from any criminal liability in respect of any claim or defence made by him

(4) The amount of any compensation awarded under this section in respect of a false or vexatious claim or defence shall be taken into account in any subsequent suit for damages or compensation in respect of such claim or defence

This section was added into the Code by Act 9 of 1922. The section does not come into operation until the Local Government has, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council, by notification in the local Official Gazette, directed that the Act shall come into force in the Province on such date as may be specified in the notification.

The section provides for payment of costs by way of compensation in cases of false or vexatious claims and defences. See notes to s 30. Costs as penalty on p 141 above

Party—The section introduces the word party which has been omitted in s 30. But an order for compensatory costs has been made against a next friend (7)

Appeal—An order awarding compensation under this section is appealable under section 104 (ff). But an Appellate Court cannot make an order when the original Court has refused to do so. See proviso to O 41 r 33

PART II.

Execution.

GENERAL

36. [New] The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the

execution of orders

Execution—Execution is the enforcement by the process of the Court of its own decrees. The main rules of procedure are enacted in this part of the Code and minor rules are relegated to O 21. These provisions apply to decrees which are capable of execution. There is no question of execution in regard to decrees that are purely declaratory.

that of the superior Court, and it is the latter decree alone that can be executed (1). If the Appellate Court is of the opinion that the decree of the original Court is not capable of execution, it may set it aside and substitute its own decree, which alone can be executed (2).

Appellate Court and the decree to be executed is that of the original Court. This would also seem to be the case when the appeal is summarily dismissed without notice to the respondent, but the cases are conflicting (3). But when the appeal is heard O 41 r 32, requires that the judgment should confirm, vary or reverse the decree from which the appeal is preferred (4) and the decree capable of execution is the decree of the Court of Appeal (5). When the decree of the Court of first instance is confirmed by the High Court and the latter decree by the Privy Council, the decree capable of execution is the decree of the Privy Council (6).

The question which decree should be executed arises in the following cases—

(a) Amendment—The only decree that can be amended is the decree that has to be executed. If the Court of Appeal confirms, varies or reverses the decree of the lower Court, the decree of the Appellate Court is the only decree that can be amended (7).

(b) Limitation—Time runs from the date of the decree capable of execution, and

(c) Time for payment fixed by the decree—When a time is fixed for payment by the decree of the lower Court, as in a decree for redemption, and the decree is affirmed on appeal, the decree capable of execution is the appellate decree. Nevertheless, the time for the performance of the condition is not extended (i) Thus in Ghanshyamlal v. Ram Narain (w) the suit was on a bond in which interest was stipulated at 30 per cent. and the decree of the first Court said that if the defendant deposited the money within three months of date of the decree he would be liable only for interest at 12 per cent. This was confirmed on appeal by the High Court and the Privy Council but the defendant was not allowed an extension of time till three months after the decree of the Privy Council. On the other hand in Noor Ali v. Koni Meah (x) a rent decree rendered a tenant liable to ejectment if the rent was not paid within 15 days. This was confirmed on appeal and it was held that he would be protected from ejectment if he paid within 15 days of the appellate decree. In a more recent case Mookerjee, J., said that the balance of judicial opinion is in favour of the view that when time is fixed by the decree of the lower Court for the payment of money, and the decree is confirmed on appeal, time runs from the date of the decree of the Appellate Court (y). It is submitted that the correct view is that the appellate decree, not being complete in itself, must be construed with reference to the decree of the lower Court and that time is not extended. The Appellate Court can however by its decree alter the time of payment, and should so frame its decree as to make it clear whether or not it intends to do so (z).

(d) Mesne profits—Mesne profits can be ordered from the date of institution of the suit until the expiry of three years from the date of the decree. This means the decree capable of execution, so that if the decree is confirmed on appeal three years run from the date of the appellate decree (a). But though the decree to be executed is the appellate decree, yet the terms of it must be ascertained by reference to the decree of the lower Court. Therefore when the original decree gave mesne profits from the date of its decree till the date of delivery of possession and was affirmed by the Privy Council, and the plaintiff got possession subsequent to the latter decree, he was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the original decree (b).

(ii) The decree to be executed must be a subsisting decree—A obtains a decree against B and C. B subsequently sues A to set aside the decree on the ground of fraud, and the decree is set aside as against him. A cannot execute the decree as against B for the decree does not subsist as against B. But he may execute the decree as against C for the decree is a subsisting decree as against C (c).

(iii) The decree to be executed must be a decree of which execution is not barred by the law of limitation.—See Limitation Act, 1908, arts 182 and 183, and see notes to sec 48 below

Execution of orders—The term “order” is defined in sec 2, cl 14, as the formal expression of any decision of a civil Court which is not a decree. An order under sec 34 of the Guardians and Wards Act 8 of 1890 directing a guardian to pay a sum of money out of his ward's estate for the marriage expenses of a person dependent on his ward is not an ‘order’ within the meaning of sec 2, cl 14, and it cannot be enforced against the ward after he has attained majority and the guardian has been discharged (d). But an order made after the dismissal of a partition suit directing the plaintiff to deposit in Court a certain sum of money as remuneration for work done by the Commissioners of partition, is an order within the meaning of sec 2, cl 14, and it may be executed as a decree (e).

Merger of decree—As to merger of decree of the first Court in the decree of the Appellate Court see Gajraj v. Sirami Nath (f) where all the cases are reviewed. See also notes to O 9, r 13, ‘Hearing of application after disposal of appeal’.

37. [S. 649, 2nd para.] The expression “Court which passed a decree,” or words to that effect, shall, in relation to the execution of decrees, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, be deemed to include,—

Definition of Court which passed a decree

- (a) where the decree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and
- (b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit

Changes introduced in the section—This section differs from the corresponding section 649 of the Code of 1852 in that the expression ‘the Court of first instance in clause (a) has been substituted for the expression ‘the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred’. As to the effect of this alteration see notes below “Court which passed a decree”—Section 35 indicates the Courts by which decrees may be executed. A decree may be executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it is sent for execution. It may also be executed by the Court to which it is transferred under sec 24 above (g). The present section explains the meaning of the expression ‘Court which passed a decree’.

(e) Chandra Kumar v. Kusum Kumar (1952 141 267 241 1 1 24 1 25) 1 1 1 1

(f) (1917) 33 All 15 26 1 1 2

(g) See Muhammad v. Talam Chand (1925) 47 All 27 28 25 1 1 24 1 25) A A 26

The expression 'Court which passed a decree' includes not only the Court which actually passed the decree but the Courts mentioned in clauses (a) and (b) of the present section. The following rules are deducible from this section and section 38 —

1 Where the decree to be executed is a decree of a Court of first instance, the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance

2 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by a Court of first appeal the proper Court to execute it is also the Court of first instance

3 Where the decree to be executed is a decree passed by the High Court in second appeal then also the proper Court to execute it is the Court of first instance. Thus where a suit is instituted in the Court of a Subordinate Judge and an appeal from the decree is preferred to the District Court, and a second appeal is preferred to the High Court, the proper Court to execute the decree of the High Court is the Court of first instance that is the Court of the Subordinate Judge. Under the Code of 1902, sec. 649 para. 2 of which the present section is in the main a reproduction, the proper Court to execute the decree would be the District Court, the expression there used being 'the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred.' As a matter of practice however the Court of intermediate appeal never executed decrees passed by the High Court in second appeal. The substitution of the expression 'Court of first instance' in clause (a) of the present section for the expression 'Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred' gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts when the present Code was enacted.

4 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist the only Court that can execute the decree is the Court which at the time of making the application for execution would have jurisdiction to try the suit in which the decree was passed. The application for execution must be made to that Court. But if the application is to execute the decree by the attachment and sale of immovable property not situate within its jurisdiction, the Court must nevertheless entertain the application, and then transfer the application to the Court having territorial jurisdiction. Thus in Sreenath v Priyanath (A), a rent decree was passed by the 3rd Munsiff's Court at Bhanga. That Court was then abolished and became the Court of the 2nd Munsiff at Gopalgunje. The rent suit fell within the pecuniary limits of the 2nd Munsiff at Gopalgunje and therefore the Court at Gopalgunje was the Court which passed the decree under sec. 37 (b). The application to execute the decree was therefore made to the Gopalgunje Court. But the application was to execute the decree by the attachment and sale of immovable property, not within the jurisdiction of the Gopalgunje Court but within the jurisdiction of the 1st Munsiff's Court at Bhanga. Nevertheless it was held that the Gopalgunje Court had jurisdiction to entertain the application, but that it should not itself order the sale of property outside its jurisdiction but should transfer the application to the Bhanga Court for making and executing the order for sale. Mitter, J. said that the Gopalgunje Court did not function merely as a sort of post office for receiving and transmitting the application but that it could determine questions as to the executability of the decree. A Court vested with the powers of a Court of Small Causes ceases to exist as a Court of Small Causes when those powers are withdrawn (i). A Court does not cease to exist merely because its head quarters are removed to another place or because the local limits (j) or the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (k) are altered.

5 Where the Court of first instance has ceased to have jurisdiction to execute the decree — In this case the Court of execution is the Court which at the time of the application would have jurisdiction to entertain the suit in which the decree was passed. But the jurisdiction of the original Court is not entirely excluded. A decree is passed by Court X directing the sale of immovable property within its jurisdiction. After the decree and before the application in execution for sale, the property directed to be sold is transferred by the Local Government's notification from the jurisdiction of Court X to the jurisdiction of Court Y. Has Court X jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution and to order the sale of the property? According to the Calcutta decisions, both Court X and Court Y have jurisdiction to entertain the application, but if the application is made to Court X, it should not itself make an order for the sale of the property, but transfer the application to Court Y for making and executing the order for sale (l). The Madras decisions have not been consistent. In a case of 1907 it was held that Court X has jurisdiction to entertain an application for execution, but the question whether it could itself order the sale of the property was not decided (m). In a case of 1914 it was said that Court X has no jurisdiction to entertain the application (n), but this was overruled in a Full Bench decision in 1919. Wallis C.J., observed that the power of sending the decree to another Court was sufficient to meet the case. The learned Chief Justice construed sec. 150 as conferring upon Court Y jurisdiction to entertain the application for execution, but was of opinion that the section could not be construed as taking away from Court X the power which it had according to the unbroken current of authorities of entertaining the application (o). In a case decided in 1927 it was said that Court X has power to entertain the application for transmission to Court Y but has no power to sell the property (p). In 1932 a Full Bench of the Madras High Court distinguished notifications which effect a change of jurisdiction in the future from those which effect a transfer of past business, and held that sec. 150 only applied to the latter. If the notification only effects a change of jurisdiction for the future, Court Y which passed the decree has jurisdiction to entertain the application and to execute the decree, though the decree holder may as a matter of convenience apply to Court X to transfer the decree for execution to Court Y (q). But a Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immovable property, if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (r).

Cl (b) "Ceased to have jurisdiction to execute"—A Court does not cease to have jurisdiction to execute its decree, because it is abolished and re-established (s) or merely because its business is transferred by the District Judge under the Act constituting it to another Court (t) or because the area in which the judgment debtor resides is transferred from its jurisdiction to that of another Court (u). Where an order was made by the High Court of Calcutta rejecting a petition for leave to appeal to the Privy Council and directing the petitioner to pay the respondent's costs but the order was silent as to the Court by which it was to be executed it was held that the circumstance that the High Court on its appellate side does not in practice execute its own decrees and orders did not make that Court, as regard the execution of the order, a Court that

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree—The following are the leading rules relating to the jurisdiction of Courts executing decrees —

RULE I—No court can execute a decree in which the subject matter of the suit or of the application for execution is properly situate "entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction—Territorial jurisdiction in other words, is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree (a)

Exception 1—The Court which passed a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage of immovable property has power in execution of its decree to order the sale of such property, though it may be situate beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction—A sues B in a Court in district X on a mortgage of two properties, one situate in district X and the other in district Y. A decree is passed for the sale of both the properties. The Court in district X having jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the property situate in district X (a) has also jurisdiction to sell that property in execution of its decree, though the property is situate beyond its jurisdiction. It is not bound to send the decree for execution as regards the property in district Y to the Court of that district under sec 39(c), but it may do so (b). In the latter case the decree as regards the property in district Y may be executed by the Court of district Y (c). See also notes to sec 17.

Exception II—Where 'after the passing of a decree' in a "suit for the enforcement of a mortgage" the whole of the immovable property included therein falls, by transfer of jurisdiction, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of another Court, the application for execution of the decree, according to the Calcutta rulings may be made either to the Court which passed the decree (though the property is no longer within its jurisdiction), or to the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immovable property falls by such transfer, but where the application is made to the former Court, it should not itself order the property to be sold, but should transfer it to the latter Court for passing and executing the order for sale (d) See note to s 37 "Court which passed the decree," rule 5, p 154

Exception III—The salary of public officer or of a servant of a Railway company or local authority may be attached by a Court though the disbursing officer may not be within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction See O 21, r 48, and notes thereto

RULE II—Where a decree has been passed for the payment of money, and the decree holder applies for attachment and sale of immovable property (belonging to the judgment debtor) which forms one estate a part whereof is situated within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court executing the decree and part beyond such limits, the Court executing the decree has the power to attach and sell the whole estate including the portion situated beyond the local limits of its jurisdiction See O 21, r 3, and notes thereto

RULE III—Whether a Court to which a decree has been sent for execution under s 39 has jurisdiction to execute the decree, if the amount of the decree exceeds the limits of the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court? There is a conflict of decision as to whether the Court of execution is restricted to the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction To put the question in a concrete form, if a decree for Rs 7,000 is sent for execution to a Court whose pecuniary jurisdiction does not exceed Rs 5,000, can the latter Court execute the decree? Yes, according to Madras (e) No, according to Calcutta (f), Bombay (g) and Patna (h)

RULE IV—Where the decree sought to be executed is passed by a competent Court, the Court will not be deemed to be incompetent to execute the decree merely because by reason of the amount of interest or mesne profits ascertained for a period subsequent to the institution of the suit, the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 4,000 and interest in a Court of which the pecuniary jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5,000 A then applies to the Court for execution At the date of the application for execution, the total amount of the decree by reason of accumulation of interest exceeds Rs 5,000 The Court has jurisdiction to execute the decree All the Courts are agreed on the point (i), for if the Court had jurisdiction at the time of the institution of the suit, incidental causes such as the accumulation of profits or interest or a rise in price will not affect its jurisdiction See notes to s 6

RULE V—A Court to which execution of a decree is transferred has no jurisdiction to order either the attachment or sale of immovable property in execution, if at the time of the order such Court had no territorial jurisdiction over the property (j)

Powers of executing Court—Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree—A Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree. It must take the decree as it stands (k). It has no power to entertain any objection as to the validity of the decree (l) or that it was obtained by fraud (m) or as to the legality or correctness of the decree (n) e.g., an objection that the decree sought to be executed was passed against a wrong person (o) or that it was passed against a lunatic or a minor not properly represented (p). The reason is that a decree, though it may not be according to law is binding and conclusive between the parties until it is set aside either in appeal or revision (q). For the same reason the Court executing a decree cannot alter, vary or add to the terms of the decree (r) even by consent of parties (s). A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that when a decree is made by a Court which apparently had not jurisdiction to make it the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it (t). That High Court has construed the word 'apparently' to mean that the decree appears on the face of it to have been passed by a Court which had not jurisdiction (u). Accordingly when a Court passed a decree in terms of an award under the Arbitration Act 1899 the Calcutta High Court held that the Court of execution was entitled to refuse to execute it but as such awards are under s. 15 of that Act enforceable as decrees the High Court directed the application to be treated as an application to execute the award (v).

A Full Bench of the Mangalore High Court has expressed emphatic dissent from the Calcutta decision and holds that it is against public policy and good sense that the validity of the decree should be questioned by the executing Court (w).

In a case in which an application was made to execute a final decree after the preliminary decree on which it rested had been set aside on appeal a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that as the final decree was superseded the Court of execution had power to determine whether the decree was a valid and operative decree and to refuse to execute it if it was no longer operative (x). This was approved by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (y). Rankin C.J. observed that this case had not been considered in the previous Full Bench case (z).

But a decree passed against a person who was dead at the date of the decree without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity and

Construction of decree by executing Court—If the decree is free from ambiguity the Court of execution is bound to execute it whether it be right or wrong (b) But though a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree, it is quite competent to construe the decree where the terms of the decree are ambiguous, and to ascertain its precise meaning, for unless this is done the decree cannot be executed If the decree creates a charge on property in which the judgment debtor had a widow's estate, the executing Court has jurisdiction to inquire if the charge continued after the widow's death and if it could be enforced against the property in the hands of her legal representative (c) The construction of a decree must be governed by the pleadings and the judgment (d) And the Court should, if possible, put such a construction upon the decree as would make it in accordance with law (e) When a particular construction has been put upon a decree in a former execution proceeding it is not open to the Court in a subsequent application to treat that construction as erroneous See note to s 11, "Orders in execution proceedings," on p 87 above

41. [S. 283, 4th para.] The Court to which a decree is sent for execution shall certify to the Court which passed it the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same the circumstances attending such failure.

Certify—The Court of execution must certify the result of the execution to the Court which passed the decree and transferred it for execution. When the certificate is sent the transferee Court ceases to have a right of the execution proceeding, until then the decree rests in the transferee Court (r). The Court is not bound to certify failure of execution if the decree holder wishes to make another attempt (u). The Oudh Court has held that though the transferee Court ceases after certification to have jurisdiction further to execute the decree it has power to decide an objection taken before it in respect of anything done in the course of the execution proceedings taken by it (x). Mere notification of payments made on account of the decree to the Court which passed the decree does not amount to a certification under this section (y). In a Bombay case it was said that the section only means that the Court of execution should keep the Court which passed the decree informed of what has happened in the execution (z). This is incorrect, for the certificate is a very important step, it is a formality which has the effect of determining the jurisdiction of the transferee Court and is only sent after complete failure to execute or after the Court has executed as far as it can (a).

42. [S. 228] The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.

Powers of Court executing transferred decree—The Court executing a transferred decree has the same powers as if the decree had been passed by itself. Successive execution applications must be made to the transferee Court and its jurisdiction continues until (1) the execution proceeding is withdrawn from it or (2) it has certified under s. 41 execution or execution as far as possible, or failure to execute (b). The mere striking off or rejection of an execution application for some informality in the application does not terminate the jurisdiction of the transferee Court to execute the decree or render it necessary to send a certificate to the transferor Court (c). If

Construction of decree by executing Court—If the decree is free from ambiguity the Court of execution is bound to execute it whether it be right or wrong (b) But though a Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree it is quite competent to construe the decree where the terms of the decree are ambiguous and to ascertain its precise meaning for unless this is done the decree cannot be executed If the decree creates a charge on property in which the judgment debtor had a widow's estate the executing Court has jurisdiction to inquire if the charge continued after the widow's death and if it could be enforced against the property in the hands of her legal representative (c) The construction of a decree must be governed by the pleadings and the judgment (d) And the Court should if possible, put such a construction upon the decree as would make it in accordance with law (e) When a particular construction has been put upon a decree in a former execution proceeding it is not open to the Court in a subsequent application to treat that construction as erroneous See note to s 11, Orders in execution proceedings on p 87 above

Powers of executing Court—Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree—A Court executing a decree cannot go behind the decree. It must take the decree as it stands (1). It has no power to entertain any objection as to the validity of the decree (2) or that it was obtained by fraud (3) or as to the legality or correctness of the decree (4) e.g. an objection that the decree ought to be executed was passed against a wrong person (5) or that it was passed against a minor or a minor not properly represented (6). The reason is that a decree though it may not be according to law is binding and conclusive between the parties until it is set aside either in appeal or revision (7). For the same reason the Court executing a decree cannot alter or vary or add to the terms of the decree (8) even by insertion of part (9). A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held that when a decree is made by a Court which apparently has no jurisdiction to make it the executing Court is entitled to refuse to execute it (10). That High Court has construed the word "apparently" to mean that the decree appears on the face of it to have been passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction (11). Accordingly when a Court passed a decree in terms of an award under the Arbitration Act 18— the Calcutta High Court held that the Court of execution was entitled to refuse to execute it but as such awards are under the Act enforceable as decrees the High Court directed the application to be treated as an application to execute the award (12).

A Full Bench of the Patna High Court has expressed dissent from the Calcutta decision and holds that it is against public policy and good sense that the validity of the decree should be questioned by the executing Court (13).

In a case in which an application was made to execute a final decree after the preliminary decree on which it rested had been set aside on appeal a Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that as the final decree was suspended the Court of execution had power to determine whether the decree was a valid and operative decree and to refuse to execute it if it was no longer operative (14). This was approved by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (15). Rankin C.J. observed that this case had not been considered in the previous Full Bench case (16).

But a decree passed against a person who was dead at the date of the decree without bringing his legal representative on the record is a nullity and

Clause (b)—If the judgment-debtor's property is out of jurisdiction the Court which passed the decree cannot attach it but must transfer the decree to the Court within whose local limits the property may be (m)

Clause (c)—As stated in rule 1 under sec 38 territorial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree. If the decree directs the sale of immovable property within the territorial limits of the jurisdiction of another Court it must be sent to that Court for execution. There is an exception to this in the case of a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage see exception 1 to Rule 1 under sec 38 above. As to such decrees the Court may either execute the decree itself or send it for execution to the Court having local jurisdiction (n)

Clause (d)—In a Bombay case the Court expressed a doubt whether clause (d) of this section enabled a Subordinate Judge to transfer a decree for execution to a Small Cause Court where the property attached was within the local jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge (o)

A decree may be executed simultaneously in more places than one—A Court passing a decree has the power to send its decree to more Courts than one for concurrent execution. But this power should be sparingly exercised and when exercised it would be in many cases proper to impose terms on the decree holder that he should not proceed to a sale under all the attachments at once (p)

Appeal—An appeal lies from an order rejecting an application for the transfer of a decree. The reason is that questions relating to the transfer of decrees are questions relating to execution within the meaning of s 47 (q). See s 2 (2)

Madras Village Munsif's Court Act I of 1889—This Act is a complete code of procedure by itself and the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be imported into it except to the extent provided by the Amending Act 2 of 1920 (r)

Award—An award filed under s 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899 is enforceable under s 15 of the Act as if it were a decree of the Court. It may therefore be transferred for execution as a decree under this section to another Court (s). So also an award made under rules framed under s 43 of the Co operative Societies Act 2 of 1912 (t)

Jurisdiction of Court executing a decree—See notes under the same head to s 38, on p 156 above

Transfer of decree for execution.—A decree passed by one Court may be sent for execution to another Court either on the application of the decree holder on one of the grounds stated in this section, or by the Court which passed it of its own motion. When a decree is sent by the Court which passed it for execution to another Court, the Court sending the decree must send a copy of the decree and other documents mentioned in O 21, r 6, to the Court by which the decree is to be executed. The latter Court must, on receiving the copy of the decree and the other documents cause the same to be filed (O 21, r 7). A mere application to transfer a decree is not an application for execution (h), and this is particularly so in Chartered High Courts where decrees are transferred by ministerial order (i). The decree holder who has applied for execution to the Court which passed the decree need not make a fresh application to the transferee Court (j). When he has not applied to the Court which passed the decree he must apply to the transferee Court for execution (O 21, r 10). The Court executing a decree sent to it for execution has the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself (s 42).

Clause (a)—This clause provides for transfer of the decree if the judgment-debtor is resident in the jurisdiction of another Court. The power of the Court under this clause to transfer a decree is not confined to the case where execution is sought against the person of the judgment debtor. The decree holder is not bound to state in the application for transfer the mode in which the decree is to be executed. If he satisfies the Court that the judgment debtor resides in the jurisdiction of another Court, he may ask for transferring the decree to that Court without stating anything more in his application (k). If the judgment debtor's garnishee is resident in another jurisdiction, the decree must be transferred there to serve a prohibitory order upon him (l).

2 41. [S. 283, 4th para.] The Court to which a decree is sent for execution shall certify to the Court which passed it the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same the circumstances attending such failure.

Result of execution proceedings to be certified

Certify—The Court of execution must certify the result of the execution to the Court which passed the decree and transferred it for execution. When the certificate is sent the transferee Court ceases to have seizin of the execution proceeding; until then the decree rests in the transferee Court (v). The Court is not bound to certify failure of execution if the decree holder wishes to make another attempt (w). The Oudh Court has held that though the transferee Court ceases after certification to have jurisdiction further to execute the decree, it has power to decide an objection taken before it in respect of anything done in the course of the execution proceedings taken by it (z). Mere notification of payments made on account of the decree to the Court which passed the decree does not amount to a certification under this section (y). In a Bombay case it was said that the section only means that the Court of execution should keep the Court which passed the decree informed of what has happened in the execution (z). This is incorrect, for the certificate is a very important step, it is a formality which has the effect of determining the jurisdiction of the transferee Court and is only sent after complete failure to execute or after the Court has executed as far as it can (a).

42. [S. 228.] The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have the same powers in executing such decree as if it had been passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.

Powers of Court executing transferred decree—The Court executing a transferred decree has the same powers as if the decree had been passed by itself. Successive execution applications must be made to the transferee Court and its jurisdiction continues until (1) the execution proceeding is withdrawn from it or (2) it has certified under s. 41 execution or execution as far as possible, or failure to execute (b). The mere striking off or rejection of an execution application for some informality in the application does not terminate the jurisdiction of the transferee Court to execute the decree or render it necessary to send a certificate to the transferor Court (c). In a Patna case (e) Court X which passed a decree transferred it for execution to Court Y. An execution application was disposed of by Court Y but no certificate under s. 41 was sent to Court X. Subsequently the decree was confirmed on appeal and a second execution application was presented to Court Y reciting the fact of the confirmation of the decree by the Appellate Court. This was construed as an application to execute the decree of the Appellate Court. It was then objected that the appellate decree had never been transferred for execution. This objection was overruled. It was held that Court X had under s. 37A power to execute the appellate decree, and that as Court Y had all the powers of Court X it retained its jurisdiction to execute the decree even after the appeal.

The transferee Court can decide all questions arising in execution as if it were its own decree (f) and has power under O 21, r 29 to stay execution of the transferred decree (f1)

Limitation on the powers of the transferee Court.—The jurisdiction of the transferee Court is limited to the execution of the decree transferred to it and it cannot transfer the decree for execution to another Court (g). In other respects its powers are limited in the same way as if it were its own decree. It cannot entertain an objection as to the legality or correctness of the decree (h), or that the decree is defective (i), or that it was obtained by fraud (j), or that it directs a sale of property which is not saleable under s. 60 of the Code (k). It cannot alter, vary or add to the terms of the decree, or allow future interest where none is allowed by the decree (l), nor can it question the right of a transferee of a decree whose name is on the record as the person entitled to execute it (m).

The transferee Court has no power to question the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree (n). There were conflicting decisions on this point which has now been settled by the omission from O 21, r 7 of the words 'or the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it' which occurred in s 225 of the Code of 1882. The Calcutta High Court has held that when a decree appears on the face of it to have been passed by a Court which had no jurisdiction the Court of execution is entitled to refuse to execute it (o). But the Rangoon High Court, in the case of a transferred decree, has expressed dissent and has held that the validity of a decree cannot be questioned by the executing Court (p).

If the Court which passed the decree has made an order for execution the transferee Court cannot question the legality or propriety of that order (g) It cannot therefore entertain an objection that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation at the time when the order for execution was made (r), but if the transferor Court which passed the decree has made no order for execution the Court of execution has power to decide whether execution is barred by limitation (s) or it may stay execution and leave the objection to be decided by the Court which passed the decree (t)

The transferor Court does not altogether surrender control—After transferring a decree to another Court for execution the Court which passed the decree cannot itself execute the decree and an application for execution made to it after the transfer and before a certificate of non-satisfaction under s. 41 has been returned is not even a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation (u). But the Court which passed the decree does not altogether surrender control of the execution proceeding. It has power under O 21 r 26 to make an order for stay of execution. It may withdraw execution by calling back the decree (v) or it may make an order for simultaneous execution by another Court (w). It has moreover jurisdiction to decide an objection as to limitation if referred to it by the transferee Court (x). If the decree is assigned after transfer the assignee must apply for execution to the original Court (y). If after a decree has been transferred for execution the judgment debtor dies the Court which passed the decree is by s. 50 the proper Court to order that execution should proceed against the legal representative. This is however merely a question of procedure and if the transferee Court makes the order that would be only an irregularity which might be waived (z).

43. [S 229] Any decree passed by a Civil Court established in any part of British India to which the provisions relating to execution do not extend, or by any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State, may, if it cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, be executed in manner herein provided within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India

Execution of decrees passed by British Courts in places to which this part does not extend or in foreign territory

This section applies to British Courts in Scheduled Districts and to British Courts in foreign territory. Such Courts may transfer their decrees for execution to Courts in British India to which the Code applies. The Court of the Political Agent Sikkim is a Court referred to in the section and it may transfer its decrees for execution to the Subordinate Judge at Darjeeling (a). The application for execution of a transferred decree must shew that this Court is one referred to in the section (b).

Execution of decrees of Courts of Native States. By notification.—For notifications issued under this section, see General Statutory Rules and Orders, Vol I, pp. 622 625, and Vol IV, pp. 682, 683 and 695

Decree of Courts of Native States.—The section uses the words "Native Prince or State" which are more restrictive than the words "foreign Prince or State" in section 43, and therefore does not refer to foreign Courts outside India. But the section does not take Native State decrees out of the category of foreign decrees (c) It empowers a Court in British India to execute a decree transferred from a notified Native State Court, but the British Court is not precluded from refusing execution on the ground that the Native State Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (d), or that the decree was obtained by fraud (e) The judgment debtor will have the same defences as if he were sued on the foreign judgment (f) The section was merely intended to alter the procedure for enforcing Native States' decrees (g), and must be construed as subject to the same limitations as are contained in s. 13

Limitation for execution of Native State decree.—The period of limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State transferred for execution to a Court of British India is not the period prescribed by the law of that State, but that prescribed by the law of British India, that is, three years from the date of the decree [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch. I, art 182] (h)

45. [S. 229-A.] So much of the foregoing sections of this Part as empowers a Court to send a decree for execution to another Court shall be construed as empowering a Court in British India to send a decree for execution to any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Governor-General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared this section to apply.

the time when the order for execution was made (r); but if the transferor Court which passed the decree has made no order for execution, the Court of execution has power to decide whether execution is barred by limitation (s), or it may stay execution and leave the objection to be decided by the Court which passed the decree (t)

The transferor Court does not altogether surrender control.—After transferring a decree to another Court for execution the Court which passed the decree cannot itself execute the decree, and an application for execution made to it after the transfer and before a certificate of non satisfaction under s. 41 has been returned, is not even a step in aid of execution so as to save limitation (u) But the Court which passed the decree does not altogether surrender control of the execution proceeding It has power under O 21, r 20, to make an order for stay of execution. It may withdraw execution by calling back the decree (v), or it may make an order for simultaneous execution by another Court (w) It has moreover jurisdiction to decide an objection as to limitation if referred to it by the transferee Court (x) If the decree is assigned after transfer the assignee must apply for execution to the original Court (y) If after a decree has been transferred for execution the judgment debtor dies, the Court which passed the decree is by s. 50 the proper Court to order that execution should proceed against the legal representative This is, however, merely a question of procedure and if the transferee Court makes the order, that would be only an irregularity which might be waived (z)

43. [S. 229] Any decree passed by a Civil Court established in any part of British India to which the provisions relating to execution do not extend, or by any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor-General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State, may, if it cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, be executed in manner herein provided within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India.

Execution of decrees passed by British Courts in places to which this part does not extend or in foreign territory

This section applies to British Courts in Scheduled Districts and to British Courts in foreign territory Such Courts may transfer their decrees for execution to Courts in British India to which the Code applies The Court of the Political Agent, Sikkim, is a Court referred to in the section and it may transfer its decrees for execution to the Subordinate Judge at Darjeeling (a) The application for execution of a transferred decree must shew that this Court is one referred to in the section (b)

Decree of Courts of Native States — The section uses the words 'Native Prince or State' which are more restrictive than the words 'foreign Prince or State' in section 43 and therefore does not refer to foreign Courts outside India. But the section does not take Native State decrees out of the category of foreign decrees (c). It empowers a Court in British India to execute a decree transferred from a notified Native State Court, but the British Court is not precluded from refusing execution on the ground that the Native State Court had no jurisdiction to pass the decree (d) or that the decree was obtained by fraud (e). The judgment debtor will have the same defences as if he were sued on the foreign judgment (f). The section was merely intended to alter the procedure for enforcing Native States decrees (g) and must be construed as subject to the same limitations as are contained in s. 13.

Limitation for execution of Native State decree — The period of limitation for execution of a decree of a Court of a Native State transferred for execution to a Court of British India is not the period prescribed by the law of that State but that prescribed by the law of British India that is three years from the date of the decree [Limitation Act 1908 Sch I art 182] (h).

and empowered by notification under this section. It is only when the Court in foreign territory is a Court established and continued by the Governor General in Council in the extraterritorial jurisdiction that there is power to provide for the transfer to them of decrees of British Indian Courts for execution, for both in Native States and in other foreign territory execution would be pursuant to the legislative authority or sovereign power of such State or territory (i)

The two previous sections dealt with the converse case of the execution by British Courts of decrees of—

- (a) British Courts in Scheduled Districts, see 43
- (b) British Courts in foreign territory including Native States, see 43
- (c) Foreign Courts in Native States, see 44.

All other decrees of foreign Courts i.e., Courts outside India and Courts of Native States not notified under sec. 44 must be enforced by suit. But as regards foreign Courts in Native States a reciprocal arrangement is sometimes effected by treaty for the execution of their decrees in our Courts and our decrees in their Courts. Such an arrangement was made with Travancore in 1857 and is referred to in the undermentioned case (j)

(2) The Court to which a precept is sent shall proceed to attach the property in the manner prescribed in regard to the attachment of property in execution of a decree

Provided that no attachment under a precept shall continue for more than two months unless the period of attachment is extended by an order of the Court which passed the decree or unless before the determination of such attachment the decree has been transferred to the Court by which the attachment has been made and the decree holder has applied for an order for the sale of such property

Attachment under precept—It was at one time proposed to do away with the system of execution by transfer of decree under sections 30 to 42 and to substitute another system whereby the Court which passed the decree retained complete control and issued precepts to one or more other Courts to carry on execution under its direction. This proposal was abandoned and the system of execution by transfer of decree retained. But the proposal led to the insertion of the present section by which the Court which passed the decree can issue a precept of attachment to endure for two months or pending transfer of decree and application for execution. The object of a precept is to enable a decree holder to obtain an interim attachment where there is ground to apprehend that he may otherwise be deprived of the fruits of his decree. No such attachment however can continue for more than two months except in the two cases mentioned in the section. The effect of the provision is to render re-attachment unnecessary.

The Court to which a precept is issued derives its authority from that precept and has no power to do anything not authorized thereby. But it must be presumed to have inherent powers to deal with all matters that may incidentally arise in connection with proceedings for attachment. It cannot therefore be said that the Court to which a precept is issued has no jurisdiction to stay execution if the judgment debtor deposits the decretal amount in Court or gives security for payment of the amount (4).

QUESTIONS TO BE DETERMINED BY COURT EXECUTING DECREE

47 [S. 244] (1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit

Questions to be determined by the Court executing decree

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a part of a suit and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional court-fees

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court

Explanation—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit

Changes introduced in the section—This section corresponds with sec. 44 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

1. Sub-clauses (a) and (b) of sec. 244 which provided for the determination of questions regarding the amount of mesne profits and interest in execution proceedings have been omitted as it was deemed expedient that such questions should be determined by the decree and not in execution. See O. 20 r. 12.
2. The words "or to the stay of execution thereof" which occurred in sec. 244 after the words "execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" have been omitted in the present section. As to the effect of the omission see notes "Stay of execution".
3. Sub-section (2) of the present section is new. It gives legislative recognition to the practice followed by the Courts under the Code of 1882. See notes below under the head "Sub-section (2) Court may treat suit as an application".

- 4 Under the old sec 244 the Court executing the decree had the option, when a question arose as to who was the representative of a party, itself to determine the question or to stay execution until it was determined by a separate suit. Sub section (3) of the present section renders it obligatory on the executing Court itself to determine the question, as it was considered inexpedient that separate suits should be instituted for the decision of such a question. See notes below under the head "Sub section (3) Inquiry as to who is the representative of a party."
- 5 The Explanation sets at rest a conflict of judicial decisions noted below in the commentary under the head "Explanation to the section and parties to suit."

To what decrees section applies.—This section has no application when the decree is a nullity, for such a decree is not a decree at all. If the defendant dies after the hearing of the suit is concluded and judgment reserved, the decree is binding on his estate. see O 21, r 6. This is on the principle that actus curiar nemini fuit injuriæ, and judgment is entered up nunc pro tunc (l). But if the defendant dies before the hearing is concluded and the decree is passed without bringing his legal representative on the record, the decree is a nullity and incapable of execution (m). If an application is made to execute the decree against the legal representative he can challenge the validity of the decree in execution proceedings (n), and if his property is taken in execution he can sue to recover it (o). Nor does the section refer to declaratory decrees, for the rights declared by such decrees can only be enforced by a suit. If a decree has been construed as a declaratory decree, creating new rights and obligations, sec 47 does not apply and it can only be enforced by a suit (p). The section refers only to decrees which are capable of execution. If a decree is capable of execution as to costs no suit will lie for such costs (q).

Section to be construed liberally.—It is settled law in India that no action will lie on an executable judgment, for on such a judgment the only remedy is execution (r). The section is so framed as to prohibit in a separate suit any relief being granted which will interfere with the conduct of execution proceedings by the Court executing the decree (s). The main principle underlying this section is that matters relating to the execution discharge, or satisfaction of a decree and arising between the parties, or their representatives, should be determined in the execution proceeding, and not by separate suit. It matters not whether such question arises before or after the decree has been executed (t). The section provides a cheap and expeditious procedure for the trial of such questions without recourse to a separate suit. The Privy Council referring to the corresponding section of the Act of 1801 said "this enactment was undoubtedly passed for the beneficial purpose of checking needless litigation, and their Lordships do not desire to limit its operation" (u). Again with reference to the Code of 1882 the Privy Council stressed the same point in Prasanna Kumar v. Kali Das (r), and said: "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244. Following these decisions a wide and liberal construction has always been placed upon the section (r).

On the other hand the conditions which bar a separate suit must not be lost sight of. These conditions refer (1) to the questions, and (2) to the parties. The questions must relate to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. The parties must be the parties to the suit or their representatives. If both these conditions are fulfilled the question must be determined in execution proceedings and a separate suit will be barred.

"And not by a suit"—whether objection to execution can be raised by way of defence.—The section provides that all questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit. The words "and not by a separate suit" have given rise to the question whether if a party to a suit fails to raise an objection to execution in execution proceedings, he may raise it by way of defence in a suit brought against him. In Bhiram Ali v. Gopi Kanth (x) the High Court of Calcutta held that he is entitled to raise the objection by way of defence. The ground of the decision was that what is prohibited by the section is the determination of questions relating to execution by a separate suit and not their determination in a separate suit. Bhiram Ali's case and the Calcutta cases which followed it have been overruled by a recent Full Bench ruling of the same High Court in Lalshman Chandra v. Ramdas Mondal (y). The grounds of the decision are (1) that the words "shall be determined by the Court executing the decree" amount to a direction that the executing Court alone shall determine questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, thus giving the Court executing the decree exclusive jurisdiction to determine such questions and (2) that the prohibition conveyed by the words "and not by a separate suit" is a provision in aid of the previous direction. In the Full Bench case the decree was satisfied by an adjustment, but the adjustment was not certified to the Court as required by O. 21, r. 2. The decree holder applied for execution and the judgment-debtor's property was put up for sale and purchased by the decree holder himself. The decree holder afterwards sued the judgment debtor for possession. The judgment-debtor contended that the decree had been satisfied and that the sale was therefore fraudulent and void. It was held that the judgment debtor was precluded by this section from raising this defence. The Full Bench held that it did not make any difference whether the objection was raised by the judgment debtor by a suit of his own or by way of defence in a suit brought against him. Similarly if A obtains a decree against B as legal representative of C, and in execution of the decree property alleged to belong to the estate of C is sold and purchased by P and P sues B for possession, B is precluded by this section from contending that the property belonged to him and that it did not form part of the estate of C (z). Bhiram Ali's case has been followed by the High Court of Madras (a). The Madras decisions require reconsideration in the light of the Full Bench ruling referred to above.

Questions relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction—Questions relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives are within this section and they must be decided in execution and not by separate suit. The following are examples of such questions—

1 Property wrongly taken in execution—If the decree holder takes in execution land not included in the decree, or in excess of the decree, the judgment-debtor must apply under this section for the recovery of such land, and a separate suit for that purpose will not lie (b). The plaintiff obtained a decree against only one of two defendants, but took in execution monies that had been paid by the surety of the other defendant. The Privy Council said that the question was between parties to the suit and related to the satisfaction of the decree and that whatever remedy the aggrieved defendant had, section 47 precluded a suit against the plaintiff (c).

2 Property taken in execution of decree subsequently amended—If a mortgagee brings property to sale in execution of a decree for sale, and an error in the mortgage amount is subsequently discovered the judgment debtor claiming a refund of the excess (d), or the decree holder claiming to recover the deficit (e), must apply under this section and a separate suit will not lie.

3 Property taken in execution of ex parte decree set aside—If property is realized in execution of an ex parte decree which is afterwards set aside, the judgment-debtor must apply for restitution under this section (f). There is however a conflict of decisions as to whether this case falls under section 144. See note under that section, "Where the decree is varied or reversed".

4 Injunction granted by decree—A suit to enforce a permanent injunction granted by a decree is barred by this section. The remedy is by execution (g).

5 Objections to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives—See notes below under the same heading.

6 Adjustment of decree—The question whether a decree has been paid or adjusted out of Court is one for the Court of execution to decide under this section. If the judgment debtor applies to enter up satisfaction of a decree by a writing in the nature of a compromise and the decree holder objects that the writing was obtained by fraud, the question is one relating to the discharge of the decree to be decided by the Court of execution under this section (h). If the adjustment has not been certified by the judgment debtor within the time allowed by law, and the decree holder proceeds to execute the decree, the dispute no doubt is one relating to the satisfaction of the decree, but it cannot be dealt with either under this or any other section relating to execution, for an uncertified adjustment cannot be recognized by any Court executing the decree (i). See O 21, r 2 (3).

7. Agreement not to execute decree—If the judgment-debtor objects that the decree-holder had prior to the passing of the decree, agreed not to execute it or to execute it only in part, the question is one which according to all the Courts (j), except Calcutta (k) and Rangoon (l), should be determined under this section by the Court of execution. The Calcutta and Rangoon Courts consider that the real question in such a case is whether the decree to be executed is the decree as passed by the Court or as agreed upon by the parties, and that such an inquiry is outside the scope of this section for the section presupposes the existence of a decree as to which there is no dispute. The Lahore High Court has held that an objection that the decree holder had agreed prior to the decree that the judgment debtor would not be personally liable cannot be heard by a Court of execution for that would be to alter the terms of the decree (m). In a later case (n) the Madras High Court has said that if the agreement relates to the execution of the decree, the question may be determined under s. 47—but that an agreement which directly strikes at the decree cannot be pleaded in execution and that a compromise prior to the decree which has the effect of reducing the amount for which the decree can be executed cannot be pleaded. The Court, however, admitted that there are cases on the border line predecree arrangements which though in form they relate to execution do in substance modify or totally nullify the decree.

8. Substituted share—Where a decree gives a right to possession of a share in an ijmal mahal, which has prior to the date of the decree been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act (Beng. Act 5, 1897), the Court in proceedings for execution of the decree has power under this section to put the decree holder in possession of the specific land substituted for his share on partition (o).

9. Accretion to mortgaged property—The question whether certain property is an accretion to the mortgaged property is a question to be determined under this section in execution of a decree for redemption obtained by the mortgagor against the mortgagee (p).

10. Waste committed by judgment-debtor after decree for possession—The question whether the judgment debtor has committed waste, e.g., cut down trees, after a decree against him for possession, is one to be dealt with under this section, and not by a separate suit (q).

11. Decree for possession—Where a decree is passed for possession in a suit for pre-emption conditional on the plaintiff paying a specified sum of money within a time fixed by the Court, and the money is paid, but possession is not delivered to the plaintiff, his only remedy is by an application under this section. A suit for possession is barred under this section (r).

Questions not relating to execution, discharge or satisfaction—If the question that arises between the parties or their representatives does not relate to the distribution of assets (d) or between joint degree holders inter se (e) are not within the section.

(2) Questions between judgment-debtors inter se—The Allahabad High Court has held that questions between judgment-debtors inter se are not within the section (f). But the Madras High Court has recently held that they are (g) and this has been followed by Patna (h).

(3) Questions between a party and his own representatives are not within the section (i)

When a party is suing or being sued in a representative capacity [see II, Explanation VI and O 1 r 8] all persons whom such party represents are parties. Thus if a decree is passed against a karnavan of a tarwad in his representative capacity all members of the tarwad are parties to the suit (j) in their capacity of members of the tarwad (k). A minor (l) or a lunatic (m) not represented by a proper guardian ad litem is deemed not to be a party to the suit. An objection, however, on this ground cannot be taken in execution proceedings against the minor or lunatic, for an executing Court cannot go behind the decree but the judgment may be attacked in revision or by appeal or by a regular suit (n). A judgment debtor, who objected to a sale of property on the ground that he had acquired a fresh title to it subsequent to the decree, was held not to be a party to the suit in respect of that objection (n). A benamidar is neither a party nor a representative of a party within this section (o).

Explanation to the section and parties to suit.—Under section 244 of the Code of 1882 the High Courts of Allahabad (p) and Calcutta (q) held that a plaintiff whose suit had been dismissed, and a defendant against whom a suit had been dismissed ceased to be parties to the suit. On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Madras (r) and Bombay (s) that such persons continued to be parties to the suit. The Explanation gives effect to the latter view. Objections therefore to attachment or sale by such persons come within this section and not O 21 r 58 (t). In Krishnappa v Periaswamy (u) the Madras High Court held that a defendant against whom the suit was dismissed on account of misjoinder is not a party. In Sannamma v Radhabhaya (v) the same High Court held that a defendant who had been properly impleaded, but as against whom the suit was dismissed because the plaintiff had abandoned his case as against him is a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed under s. 47. In Abdul v Sundara (w) a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that a person who is not a proper party to the suit is not a party under s. 47 for the purposes of execution, and that it matters not that the Court, instead of striking out his name under O 1, r. 10(2) has dismissed the suit as against him. A person whose name is struck off the record is a person whom the Court does not regard as a person to be bound by the decree and is therefore not a party under s. 47 (x). The Allahabad High Court has held that an order exempting a defendant from the suit is equivalent to an order dismissing the suit as against him and that if his name is not struck off the record he is a party to the suit for purposes of execution (y).

* Representatives.—The term 'representative' in this section includes not only legal representatives in the sense of heirs, executors or administrators but also 'representative in interest' that is, any transferee of the decree holder's interest, or any transferee of the judgment debtor's interest, who, so far as such interest is concerned, is bound by the decree (z). On the other hand, a surety for the performance of a decree is not a representative of a party within the meaning of this section (a). See s. 145 below. It was at one time supposed that a transferee by judicial sale could not be a representative (b), but this view is no longer tenable. It was also said that a 'representative' is a person who succeeds to the rights of any of the parties after suit (c), but this is incorrect for a transferee may be bound by the decree on the doctrine of lis pendens (d). Thus when at the time of the purchase the property purchased was under attachment in execution of a decree the purchaser was regarded as a representative of the judgment debtor (e).

Illustration

A in execution of his decree obtained on the 14th March an order for the attachment of the property of B. The attachment was actually effected on the 17th of March. But before this B had obtained an interim order from the Court of appeal for stay a copy of which was received by the Court of execution on the 16th March. The stay order was vacated on the 15th April. C believing that the attachment after the stay order was invalid purchased the property from B on the 27th May. A, however, continued to prosecute his execution proceeding against B and three years later the High Court restored the attachment. Held that as C purchased during the pendency of the execution proceedings he was bound by the order of the High Court on the principle of lis pendens and must be regarded as a representative of B. The question of the validity of the attachment is one that falls to be decided by the Court of execution, and it mattered not that the Court was called upon to decide the question formally after the judgment debtor had sold the property. Tenkatachulapathi v. Tenkalappaya (1931) 53 Mad. 493 136 I C 306, (32) A M 86.

But the Bombay High Court has held that a purchaser lite pendente is not the representative of his vendor (f). A Calcutta case said that to determine whether a particular person is a representative of a party, the two tests to be applied are, first, whether any portion of the interest of the decree holder or of the judgment debtor which was originally vested in one of the parties has by the act of parties or by operation of law vested in the person in question (g).

has been a devolution of interest whether so far as such interest is concerned that person is bound by the decree (g). A devisee (h), a legatee (i) and a person taking joint property by survivorship (j), have been held to be representatives. The following are illustrations of persons held to be representatives under this section.

(1) A transferee of a decree, or of the interest of any decree holder in a joint decree within the meaning of O. 21, r. 16 is a representative of the decree holder (l). A transferee from such transferee is also a representative of the decree holder (l).

A judgment creditor who attaches a decree held by the judgment debtor against another is a representative of the judgment debtor. I holds a decree against B. C obtains a decree against A, and in execution attaches the decree held by A against B. C is a representative of I in proceedings in execution of A's decree against B (m). See O. 21, r. 53 (3).

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 5000. B then sells certain property belonging to him to C. C is not a representative of B, for the decree is a simple money decree, and does not relate to the specific property sold to C (n).

(3) A purchaser, lessee, or mortgagee, from a judgment debtor, of property belonging to the judgment debtor and attached in execution of a decree against him, is the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section, for the property being under attachment at the date of the purchase, lease or mortgage, the purchaser, lessee or mortgagee is bound by the decree so far as the interest transferred to him is concerned (o). See section 64.

(4) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption under a private sale—A obtains a decree against B for sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. After the date of the decree, B sells his equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to C. C is a representative of B the judgment debtor for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage decree. C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree, and arising between A and C, must be determined by the Court executing A's decree, and not by a separate suit (p). The same procedure would apply even if B had transferred his interest in the property to C during the pendency of the suit and before the passing of the decree (q).

(5) Purchaser of judgment debtor's equity of redemption at a judicial sale—A obtains a decree against B for the sale of certain property mortgaged to him by B. Before the property could be sold in execution of A's decree, A, who holds a money decree against B, brings B's equity of redemption in the mortgaged property to sale in execution of his decree, and it is purchased by C. C is a representative of B, the judgment debtor, for the property having been purchased after it was affected by A's mortgage decree, C is to that extent bound by A's decree. Hence any question relating to the execution of A's decree, and arising between A and C, must be determined by the Court executing A's decree and not by a separate suit (r)

(6) A purchaser of property from a party to a suit in which an injunction has been granted affecting such property is not a "representative" within the meaning of this section — A obtains a decree against B restraining B by an injunction from obstructing him in the exercise of his right of way to his land over B's land. A then sells his land to C. If B obstructs C in the enjoyment of the right of way, C's proper remedy is by way of suit against B and not in execution under this section. The reason is that an injunction does not run with the land, and C cannot therefore claim the benefit of the decree against B (s). Note that C is not a transferee of the decree, but of the property only. See notes to s. 50, 'Decree for injunction'

(7) The Official Assignee claiming property on behalf of the creditors of an insolvent judgment debtor is not a "representative" of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section (t). In such a case he is really a third party making a claim though for some purposes he would be entitled as representing the judgment debtor to litigate matters under section 47 (u)

(8) The High Court of Allahabad has held that a purchaser from a judgment-debtor under O 21, r 83 is a "representative" of the judgment debtor within the meaning of this section (v). A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached and an order is made for the sale thereof. B then obtains a certificate from the Court under O 21, r 83, to sell the property by private sale, and the property is sold to C in pursuance of the certificate. C is a "representative" of B within the meaning of this section.

(9) A purchaser from the judgment debtor of an occupancy holding not transferable by custom is a "representative" of the judgment debtor. If the holding is sold in execution of the decree against the judgment debtor, and he is dispossessed by the auction purchaser, he may apply for possession under this section, and not under O 21, r 100 (w)

(10) A purchaser from a judgment debtor of a portion of a holding is, so far as his interest is concerned, bound by the decree for rent obtained against the judgment debtor under s. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 and by the sale in execution of that decree. He is therefore, a "representative" of the judgment-debtor, and if he is dispossessed by the auction purchaser, he may apply for possession under this section, but not under O 21, r 100 (x)

Objections to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives — Objections to attachment made by a judgment debtor or his representative must be distinguished from those made by either of them on behalf of a third person. In the former case the objection comes under this section, and a separate suit is barred. The order, however, operates as a decree, and a second appeal lies from it. In the latter case the objection is in effect one by a third person, and it falls under O 21, r 58. The objector may proceed either by an application under O 21, r 58, or by a regular suit. If he proceeds by an application under O 21, r 58, there is no appeal from the order, but he may file a suit as provided by O 21, r 63. Such a suit must be filed within one year from the date of the order.

If the judgment-debtor objects that the property is not liable to attachment or sale (y) or that the decree holder in connivance with a Court person has misappropriated part of the property attached (z) the objection is by the judgment debtor on his own behalf and it must be decided by the executing Court under this section. Similarly if property is attached as property of a deceased judgment debtor in the hands of his legal representative and the latter objects that it is not property of the deceased, but his own property the case falls under this section for the legal representative is not setting up a jus tertii (a). But if the objection is made by the judgment-debtor or his representative not on his own behalf but on account of a third party as trustee (b) or as agent of an idol (c) or on the ground that the property is wakf (d) the objection is under O 21 r 58 and not under this section.

Objections to attachment or sale by third parties—If the objection to attachment is made by a third party he may proceed either under O 21, r 58 or by a regular suit (e) and the claim cannot be dealt with under this section (f). See notes above.

Objection to attachment or sale by parties or their representatives—

Execution purchaser—We now proceed to consider cases where property of the judgment-debtor has been sold in execution of the decree and questions in which the auction purchaser is concerned arise subsequent to the sale. These questions fall into two classes according to the parties between whom they arise—

A—Questions between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment debtor on the other hand, the auction purchaser being only interested in the result

B—Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand

A Questions between the decree holder on the one hand and the judgment-debtor on the other, the execution purchaser being only interested in the result—

These questions being essentially questions between parties to the suit fall within this section (g). It is well settled that as between the judgment debtor and the decree holder an objection [to the sale in execution] can only be taken in execution and sec 244 (now sec 47) prohibits a suit by a party or his representatives against an auction purchaser to raise a question which as between the judgment-debtor and the decree holder must have been determined under that section (h). The fact that the an auction purchaser, who was not a party to the suit, is interested in the result, does not prevent the question being one between the parties. These questions therefore must be determined by the Court executing the decree, and not by a separate suit. The leading case on the subject is Prosunno Kumar v. Kali Das (i) where their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244 [now s. 47] and that, when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section." In Prosunno Kumar a case a suit was brought by the judgment debtor against his co-sharers and against the judgment-creditor and the auction purchaser to set aside a sale in execution on the ground of fraud. The fraud alleged was that the judgment-creditor had obtained a decree against the judgment debtor and his co-sharers and in execution of the decree attached the whole of the zamindari which belonged to the judgment debtor and his co-sharers; that thereafter the judgment debtor paid his quota of the judgment debt and it was arranged with the judgment creditor that the judgment-debtor's share should be exempted from sale; that pursuant to the arrangement the judgment creditor share to be attached and sold. The Privy Council held that the plaintiff's remedy was by an application under this section, and the question being one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, a separate suit to set aside the sale was barred under this section.

A judgment debtor seeking to set aside a sale on any of the following grounds must proceed by an application under this section and not by a separate suit—that the sale is illegal or a nullity for want of notice under O 21 r 22 (j), that the judgment debtor has been adjudged insolvent and the decree gives no charge upon the land (k), that the property is not liable to attachment and sale (l), that the sale is in contravention of O. 34, r. 14 (m), that the sale was not warranted by the terms of the decree (n), that the property sold did not belong to the judgment-debtor (o), that the decree holder had purchased without leave of the Court (p), that the decree had been adjusted (q), that the sale is invalid having been held after a stay order (r), that the decree holder's own property was sold by mistake instead of that of the judgment-debtor (s).

B Questions between the auction purchaser on the one hand and a party to the suit or his representative on the other hand —

One class of cases arising under this head is where the decree holder himself is the purchaser and the judgment-debtor claims to set aside the sale in execution. In such a case the judgment-debtor must proceed by an application under this section and not by a separate suit (f).

Another class of cases arising between the auction purchaser on the one hand and the judgment-debtor on the other is where the auction purchaser seeks to recover possession of the property purchased by him. The question that arises in such cases is whether the Court purchaser must proceed by an application under this section coupled with O 21, r 95, or whether he is entitled to bring a separate suit for possession? This depends on who is the purchaser, for the property may be purchased by the decree holder himself with the leave of the Court under O 21, r 72, or it may be purchased by a stranger.

First, where the decree holder himself is the purchaser—Whether the decree holder purchaser must proceed by an application depends upon—(1) whether for the purpose of recovering possession of the property he is to be regarded as a ‘party’ to the suit within the meaning of s. 47, or whether he has ceased to be a party to the suit by reason of his purchase, and (2) whether the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to ‘the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree’ within the meaning of s. 47. Upon these points there is a conflict of decisions.

According to the view taken by the High Court of Madras (u), and by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta (1), the decree holder retains his character of a "party" to the suit though he is also the purchaser, and the question as to delivery of possession is a question relating to 'the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree' within the meaning of s 47. The two conditions laid down by the section are therefore satisfied, and a separate suit for possession is barred under s 47. But in a case where a tenancy was sold in execution of a decree for rent, and the auction purchaser decree holder was obstructed in taking possession by a person who claimed to be a landlord, the Calcutta High Court held that s 47 did not apply although the rival landlord had been joined as a party to the rent suit (vi). The High Court of Madras has also applied sec 47 to an application by a purchaser from a decree holder purchaser, resisted by the judgment debtor in obtaining possession, the reason given being in one case (1c), that a purchaser from a decree holder who has purchased at a Court sale is a 'representative' of the decree holder, and in another (1) that he is a "representative" of the judgment-debtor, within the meaning of this section. In two of the cases cited above, however, the Madras Court observed that if this question had not already been settled by previous decisions of that Court, they would be disposed to hold that proceedings for obtaining possession could not be regarded as those 'relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree' within the meaning of this section (y). In a recent Full Bench case it seems to have been assumed that such proceedings related to the execution of the decree (z).

According to the other view, which is the view taken by a Full Bench of each of the High Courts of Allahabad (a) Patna (b), and Bombay (c), and in recent cases by the High Court of Lahore (d), and Rangoon (e) a decree holder purchaser stands on the same footing as a purchaser who is a stranger, so that he may proceed either by an application under O 21 r 95, or by a separate suit for possession. This view proceeds on the ground that sec 47 does not apply either because the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to the 'execution, discharge or satisfaction' of the decree or because a decree holder after he becomes purchaser of the property can no longer be said to be a party to the suit. The Oudh Court has held (f) that though the decree holder purchaser is a party to the suit, yet the question is not one under section 47 because the act of placing the purchaser in possession does not involve the decision of a question relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. The cases in which it has been held that an auction purchaser, even if he is the decree holder, is not a party to the suit, require reconsideration in view of the ruling of the Judicial Committee that such an auction purchaser is a party to the suit (g).

These two divergent views lead to different results —

- (1) According to the first view, that is, the view taken by the High Courts of Madras and Calcutta a decree holder purchaser, who seeks to recover possession from the judgment-debtor of the property purchased by him at the auction sale, can proceed only by an application under O 21, r 95, which raises a question under sec 47 such application must be made within 3 years from the date on which the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, Ch. I, art 181]. According to the latter view, that is the view taken by the High Courts of Allahabad, Patna Bombay and Lahore and the Chief Court of Oudh, he may proceed by an application under O 21, r 95. Such an application, according to that view, does not raise a question under sec 47, therefore if he does not proceed by an application, or if he makes the application but it is unsuccessful, he may fall back upon his title and sue for possession. Such suit may be brought within 12 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908 Sch. I, art. 138] so that even if the time for an application under O 21 r 95, has expired he may proceed by way of suit.

- (2) According to the other view, the application for delivery of possession falls under sec. 47, and the order made on the application amounts to a decree [a. 2 (2)] and is appealable as such. According to the latter view, sec. 47 does not apply to the case, and the application is entirely one under O 21, r 95, and no appeal lies from an order made upon such application.

If the decree holder purchaser is obstructed in obtaining possession by a stranger claiming bona fide to be in possession on his own account the question is not within the purview of sec. 47 but O 21, r 99 applies and the decree holder's remedy is by suit under O 21, r 103 (A). Similarly if the decree holder purchaser is obstructed in obtaining possession by the judgment-debtor and a stranger to the suit the case does not come within sec. 47 and he may bring a suit for possession against them (i).

When a decree holder at a Court sale obtained possession of land in excess of what was included in the mortgage and the decree, the Allahabad High Court held the judgment-debtor's suit to recover the excess was not barred, as the auction purchaser was not the representative of the decree holder (although he was the same person) (j).

Secondly where the purchaser is a stranger—Where a stranger auction purchaser seeks to recover possession from the judgment debtor two questions arise (1) whether the purchaser is a representative of either party to the suit and (2) whether the question of possession is one relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. The second question has already been discussed with reference to the decree holder purchaser and the conflict of decisions on the subject has been noted. With reference to the first question the case does not fall under the section if the stranger auction purchaser is a representative of the judgment debtor for then the question would be between a party and his own representative. But it would fall under the section if he were a representative of the decree holder. Again the case would not come under the section if he was a representative of neither. The decisions on all these points are very conflicting. The High Court of Bombay has consistently held that an auction purchaser who is a stranger is not the representative of either party to the suit (k). The High Courts of Calcutta (l) and Allahabad (m) have held that he is not the representative of the decree-holder but that he is the representative of the judgment debtor. In Madras there is a hopeless conflict of opinion. The conflict was sought to be set at rest by a reference to a Full Bench in Veyandramuthu v. Maya Nadan (n) but it cannot be said that the object was attained. Oldfield, J., and Sheshagiri Ayyar J., held that a stranger purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree was a representative of the judgment debtor, but not of the decree holder, while Abdur Rahim A.C.J., held that whether he was to be regarded as a representative of the one or the other depended upon the nature of the question raised and the right set up by the contesting party. The preponderance of authority in Madras seems to be in favour of the view that a purchaser at a sale in execution of a money decree who is a stranger is the representative of the judgment debtor and not of the decree holder with reference to questions relating to the execution discharge or satisfaction of the decree. cases cited in footnote (o) decided that a stranger purchaser is not the representative of the decree holder, while those in footnote (p) decided that he is. Madras cases cited in footnote (q) decided that a stranger purchaser is the representative of the judgment debtor, while those cited in footnote (r) decided that he is not. In later decisions the Madras High Court has construed Veyindramuthu's case as extending the application of sec 47, and that it matters not whether the person actually raising the question in a particular case is a representative of a party but that a c 47 applies if the question is one relating to the execution of a decree and is one of a nature in which the parties to the suit are adversely interested (s). The High Court of Lahore has expressed the view that a stranger purchaser is not the representative of the judgment debtor (t). The Oudh Court has adopted the view taken by Ablur Rahim, A C J. (u). It is worth while noticing in this connection the observations of the Privy Council in the undermentioned case (v).

All the High Courts (w), except the High Court of Madras, seem to hold that where an auction purchaser who is a stranger is refused in obtaining possession by the judgment debtor of the property purchased by him in execution, he may apply for delivery of possession under O 21, r 95, or he may bring a regular suit for possession. The provisions of sec 47 do not apply either because he is not the 'representative' of the decree holder or because the question as to delivery of possession is not one relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of the section. The period of limitation for an application under O 21, r 95, is 3 years from the date when the sale becomes absolute [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 181] and that for a suit is 12 years from the same date (ibid, art 138). He is entitled to bring the suit without making any application under O 21, r 95, and he may sue even after an unsuccessful application. The High Court of Bombay has held that an auction purchaser, even though a benamidar for the decree holder, is a stranger for the purposes of this rule (x). In Madras the Full Bench decision in Veyindramuthu v Maya Nadan (y), has been taken as an authority for the proposition that an auction purchaser, though he be a stranger, must proceed by an application under sec 47, and that he is not entitled to bring a regular suit for possession. In the Order of Reference it was assumed that the question as to delivery of possession related to 'the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree within the meaning of sec 47'. The judgments of the learned Judges seem to have been influenced by the observations of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar's case as to the cheap and speedy disposal of objections to execution sales. These observations are appropriate when the question is really between the parties to the suit and the auction purchaser is only an interested spectator, but they are altogether irrelevant when the question is between a judgment debtor and a stranger purchaser at an auction sale. The scope of the section is expressly limited to questions between parties to the suit and their representatives and the observations of the Privy Council do not and cannot extend the section beyond those limits. It is high time that the section was amended and the conflict set at rest.

Besides cases under O. 21, r. 95, questions relating to execution may arise in other ways. The High Court of Allahabad has held that where property not included in the mortgage deed or in the mortgage decree is sold and delivered to a stranger purchaser in execution, the judgment debtor is entitled to bring a suit against the auction purchaser for recovery of the property and that the provisions of sec. 47 do not apply to the case (a). But the Madras High Court following the construction put upon the Full Bench decision in Legindramuthu v. Maya Nadan, has held that such a case comes within sec. 47, and that a regular suit is barred (a). A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that an auction purchaser under a decree which has been, after confirmation of the sale, set aside as a result of a separate suit, is entitled to apply under sec. 47 for recovery of the purchase money from the decree-holder (b).

Sub-sec. (3). Inquiry as to who is the representative of a party.—The question whether a person is a legal representative of a party so that execution should proceed against him is one to be decided by the Court in execution (c). The Court no longer has the option of staying the execution proceeding until the matter is settled by suit. This sub section is ancillary to sub section (1) and is limited to questions relating to the execution, discharge and satisfaction of a decree, and does not apply to the determination of a question between rival representatives of one party (d). The same rule applies when the question arises in execution proceedings as to whether a certain person is a transferee of a decree, for a transferee of a decree is, as stated above, a "representative" of a party within the meaning of this section. An order determining whether a person is or is not the representative of a party is a decree [see sec. 2, cl. (2)], and is therefore appealable (e).

If the transferee of a decree dies pending execution, the executing Court has power under this section to inquire whether the transferee was merely a benamidar for another and to allow the real owner to execute the decree (f).

Stay of execution.—The words "or to the stay of execution thereof" which occurred in sec. 244 after the words "execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree" have been omitted in the present section. There are two possible views as regards the omission of these words. The one is that the words omitted may have been regarded as superfluous, for a plea that the execution of a decree may be stayed is equivalent to the plea that the decree should not be executed, and it is thus a question relating to the execution of the decree (g). The other view is that those words having been deliberately omitted by the Legislature in the present section, questions relating to the stay of execution are no longer within the section and no appeal lies from orders determining such questions (A) The Lahore High Court after a consideration of all the authorities has taken the former view (i) It holds that an order staying execution is one relating to the execution of the decree, in the same way that an order dismissing an application for execution as time barred does so relate The only difference being that in the one case execution is temporarily suspended while in the other it is prohibited It further holds that a stay order is appealable and is a decree under sec 2 (2) as it conclusively determines the very important right of the decree holder to reap forthwith the fruits of his decree

An order made at the instance of an interim receiver under sec 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920, stopping a sale does not fall under this section No appeal lies from such an order and it can only be corrected in revision (j)

In a recent Allahabad case a minor objected in execution proceedings that he had not been represented by a guardian ad litem in the suit and the Court of execution refused to entertain the objection as one affecting the validity of the decree, on appeal from the order the High Court of Allahabad treated the proceeding as a suit and made a declaration that the decree was not binding on the minor (s)

Where a sale is sought to be set aside on the ground that the "decree" was obtained by fraud —It has been stated above that the procedure for setting aside a sale on the ground of fraud in purchasing or conducting the sale is by an application under O 21, r 90, and not by a separate suit. But an execution sale may also be challenged on the ground that the decree on which it is founded is itself tainted with fraud, and in this case, the remedy is by a regular suit. The following are the leading cases on the subject —

1 A suit will lie to set aside a decree and the sale held in execution of the decree where both the decree and sale are impeached on the ground of fraud (t). The reason is that the question of the validity of a decree can only be determined by a regular suit. See notes above, "Questions not relating to execution discharge or satisfaction" p 171

2 I obtains an ex parte decree against B. In execution of the decree a certain property belonging to B is sold and purchased by C. The decree is then set aside under O 9, r 13. B thereafter sues A and C to set aside the sale, challenging not only the sale, but also the decree, on the ground of fraud. The suit is not barred under this section, B is entitled to show that the decree was obtained by fraud, and this can only be done in a regular suit (u).

Appeal —Sec 2 (2) provides that the determination of any question under sec 47 is a decree unless it is appealable as an order. A determination under O 21 r 90 is appealable as an order under O 43, r 1 (j). Such a determination when it is between the parties to the suit or their representatives falls under sec 47, but is nevertheless subject to one appeal only as an order under sec 104. The same observation applies to a decision under O 21, r 72 which also is appealable as an order under O 43, r 1 (j). Similarly a decision under O 21 r 34 is appealable as an order under O 43, r 1 (i) and is subject to one appeal only. All other decisions in execution under section 47 are decrees and subject to first and second appeal.

As regards appeal therefore orders in execution proceedings may be divided into three classes —

- (1) Orders under this section which are decrees and subject to first and second appeal
- (2) Orders which whether they fall under this section or not are declared to be orders under O 43, r 1, and are subject to one appeal only
- (3) Non appealable orders, generally of an interlocutory nature

Attempts are frequently made on behalf of appellants to shew that orders in execu-

Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings.—A party is not bound to prefer an appeal from every order in execution proceedings though the order is appealable. Whether the order be appealable or not, it may be challenged by the party aggrieved in his appeal against the final order which determines the rights of the parties (v)

An order in execution proceedings which is merely processual or interlocutory does not come within the section. It must be an order determining the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, and not merely an incidental order made with reference to the conduct of the proceedings (z). See note "Section 47 Execution proceeding" under sec 2, and note "Appeal" under O 21, r 66

Limitation—An application under this section to set aside a sale in execution of a decree must be made within 30 days from the date of the sale. [Limitation Act, 1908, Sch I, art 166] But if the sale is void, as where no notice is given as required by O 21, r 22, it is not necessary to apply to the Court to set aside the sale, hence the article applicable in such a case is the residuary art 181 which provides a period of 3 years from the date when the right to apply accrues, and not art 166 (a). An application under this section by a representative of a judgment debtor to set aside a sale on the ground that the property sold belongs to him and not to the deceased judgment debtor is governed by art 166 and must be made within 30 days from the date of sale (b).

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- (a) to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application presented after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application ; or
- (b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of article 180 of the second schedule to the Indian Limitation Act, 1877.

Changes made in the section.— This section corresponds with the third and fourth paras of s 230 of the Code of 1882 which were as follows —

“ Where an application to execute a decree for the payment of money or delivery of other property has been made under this section and granted, no subsequent application to execute the same decree shall be granted after the expiration of twelve years from any of the following dates (namely) —

- (a) the date of the decree sought to be enforced or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same, or
- (b) where the decree or any subsequent order directs any payment of money, or the delivery of any property, to be made at a certain date—the date of the default in making the payment or delivering the property in respect of which the applicant seeks to enforce the decree

Nothing in this section shall prevent the Court from granting an application for execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years where the judgment debtor has, by fraud or force, prevented the execution of the decree at some time within twelve years immediately before the date of the application ”

The following alterations have been made —

- (1) Section 230 applied only to decrees “ for the payment of money or delivery of other property ” The present section applies to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction
- (2) Section 230 applied only where an application for execution had been made “ under this section and granted ” The words “ under this section ” as also the words “ and granted ” have been omitted in the present section The result is that the rule of limitation contained in this section applies whether the previous application for execution was made under a former Code or the present Code, and whether the application was granted or not See note below, “ Orders on applications for execution ”
- (3) The words “ or the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same ” in sec 230, cl (a), have been omitted See note below ‘ Date of decree ’
- (4) The words “ or at recurring periods ” in sub section (1), cl (b), are new They are intended to give effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below, “ Date of default ”
- (5) Clause (b) of sub section (2) is new It gives effect to certain decisions under s 230 of the Code of 1882 See notes below, ‘ Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts ’

8 Interlocutory orders in execution proceedings—A party is not bound to prefer an appeal from every order in execution proceedings though the order is appealable. Whether the order be appealable or not, it may be challenged by the party aggrieved in his appeal against the final order which determines the rights of the parties (y)

An order in execution proceedings which is merely processual or interlocutory does not come within the section. It must be an order determining the rights and liabilities of the parties with reference to the relief granted by the decree, and not merely an incidental order made with reference to the conduct of the proceedings (z). (2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed

(a) to preclude the Court from ordering the execution of a decree upon an application for execution, where the judgment-debtor has by fraud prevented the execution of the decree, within twelve years immediately before the date of the application.

(b) to limit or otherwise affect the operation of section 180 of the second schedule to the Indian Act, 1877.

Changes made in the section. The word "where" is changed to "whereas" and the word "debtor" is changed to "debtor or his estate".

"Whereas a judgment-debtor has by fraud prevented the execution of a decree, within twelve years immediately before the date of the application."

(a) the date of the application for execution of the decree.

(b) where the decree is a decree for the payment of money or the delivery of a thing, the date of the decree, and the date of the application for execution of the decree.

Nothing in this section shall be deemed to preclude the execution of a decree after the expiration of the said term of twelve years, where the judgment-debtor has by fraud prevented the execution of the decree, within twelve years immediately before the date of the application.

The following alterations have been made:

(1) Section 230 applied to the payment of money or the delivery of a thing. In present section applied to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction.

(2) Section 230 applied only where a decree for execution has been made under the Code of 1882. The word "where" in the present section is also the word "and" and has been inserted in the present section. The result is that the rule of limitation is retained in the present section whether the present application for execution was made under the Code or the present Code and whether the application was granted or not. See note below. Orders of application for execution.

(3) The words "or the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same" are omitted. See note below. Date of decree.

(4) The words "or at the expiration of" in sub-section (1) are new. They are inserted to give effect to certain decisions under section 230 of the Code of 1882. See notes below. Date of decree.

(5) Clause (1) of sub-section (2) is new. It gives effect to certain decisions under section 230 of the Code of 1882. See notes below. Successor application for execution of decrees of Chartered H. C. courts.

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Courts other than Chartered High Courts—This section deals with the maximum limit of time for execution, it does not prescribe the period within which each application for execution is to be made (c)

As explained in the next paragraph, sub section 2 (b) has the effect of excluding Chartered High Courts from the operation of the section. The section only applies to Courts other than Chartered High Courts

A decree holder is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for executions of the same decree (d), and the Court has no power to refuse execution, unless—

- (i) the application is barred by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, or
- (ii) the application is barred under art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, or
- (iii) the execution of the decree is barred under the present section (e), though the application for execution may not be barred under (i) or (ii) above

(i)—If the first application for execution is dismissed after a hearing on the merits the Court will not, having regard to the general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata entertain a subsequent application for execution of the same decree (f) See notes to s 11, "Orders in execution proceedings, etc," p 87 above

(ii)—The general effect of art 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908 is to require the first application for execution of a decree of a Court other than a Chartered High Court to be made within three years of the decree and each successive application to be made within three years of the date of the last application, or since the amendment of the Article by Act 9 of 1927, from the date of the final order passed on the last application. The decree is thus kept alive for any time within the time limit for execution prescribed by this section

(iii)—This section fixes an outside period after which execution of a decree cannot be allowed even though the application may not be barred by the rule of res judicata or by art 182 of the Limitation Act (g). A obtains a decree against B for Rs 1,000 on 1st January 1910 and applies for execution of the decree within three years from the date of the decree. Further applications are made for execution of the same decree each within a period of three years from the date of the next preceding application and the last of these is made in December 1921. A then makes a fresh application for execution on 1st January 1924. No order can be made for execution of the decree for though the application is not barred under the Limitation Act, execution is barred under this section as it is made more than twelve years after the date of the decree. Under sec 230 of the Code of 1882 it was necessary to inquire if a previous application for execution was granted. This is no longer necessary. See note below 'Order on application for execution'. The twelve years period for execution is calculated from the date of decree or from the date of default in respect of any payment or delivery to be made under the decree. See note below "Terminus a quo for limitation"

Successive applications for execution of decrees of Chartered High Courts—The holder of a decree of a Chartered High Court passed in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction is entitled to present in succession any number of applications for execution of the decree and the Court is bound to entertain them, unless the application is barred—

- (i) by virtue of general principles of law analogous to those of res judicata, or
- (ii) under art 180 of the Limitation Act, 1877 [now art 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908], that being the article which applies to decrees of Chartered High Courts.

There is no bar under this section because it does not limit or otherwise affect the operation of art 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908, as it does that of art 182. In other words, the twelve years rule does not apply to decrees passed by Chartered High Courts. Art. 183 of the Limitation Act permits a revivor in the case of decrees of Chartered High Courts in the exercise of ordinary original civil jurisdiction, or of orders of His Majesty in Council. This was inconsistent with section 230 of the Code of 1882, and so that section was held to be independent of the corresponding article 180 of the Limitation Act, 1877 (a). These decisions have now been given statutory authority by subsec 2(b). The twelve years rule therefore does not apply to decrees passed by a Chartered High Court in its original civil jurisdiction. Such decrees may be kept alive for any number of years and so may orders in Council made in Privy Council appeals (i). Decrees of Chartered High Courts in the exercise of their Appellate Civil jurisdiction are not within article 183 of the Limitation Act, 1908 (j).

Orders on applications for execution.—An application for execution may either be—

- (1) granted, or
- (2) refused—
 - (a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution, as where it is refused on the ground that it is barred on the principle of res judicata or barred by the law of limitation, or
 - (b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution as where it is refused on the ground that it is not in accordance with law [O 21, r 17] (k), or
- (3) withdrawn by the applicant—
 - (a) in circumstances operating as a bar to future execution as where the withdrawal was with the object of abandoning execution, or
 - (b) in circumstances not operating as a bar to future execution (l).

Under sec 230 of the Code of 1882, the twelve years' limitation imposed by that section applied only if one at least of the previous applications was granted by the Court but not otherwise. Under the present section it matters not whether the previous applications have been granted or refused or withdrawn. All that the section now

"Fresh application"—The phrase "fresh application" has been substituted for "subsequent application" to make it clear that the application referred to in this section is a substantive application for execution and not merely an ancillary application made with the object of moving the Court to proceed in the matter of a substantive application already on the file (i) Thus where property has been attached on an application for execution, an application for sale of the attached property is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section (n) Similarly where a warrant issued for the arrest of a judgment debtor on an application for execution is returned with the remark that the judgment debtor could not be found, a subsequent application for the arrest of the judgment debtor is not a fresh application to execute the decree within the meaning of this section, but is merely an incidental application to carry on proceedings already commenced (o) On the same principle it has been held that an application to revive execution proceedings which have not terminated is not a fresh application within the meaning of this section (p) Thus when in execution of a decree for maintenance, a decree holder was put in possession of property chargeable with his maintenance but was some years later dispossessed on technical grounds, a subsequent application for execution was treated as an application to revive the original execution proceeding (q) An application by the legal representatives of a decree holder for execution on his death pending execution proceedings is not a fresh application (r) Nor is it a fresh application when the decree holder applies to continue execution proceedings against the legal representatives of a deceased judgment debtor (s) But an application for attachment of property cannot be treated as a continuation of a previous application for arrest (t), nor an application for attachment of other property, not included in the previous application for attachment (u)

An application to transfer a decree to another Court for execution is not an application for execution within the meaning of this section Such an application, though made within twelve years from the date of the decree, will not entitle the decree holder to execution if the application for execution to the Court to which the decree is transferred is made after the expiration of twelve years (v)

Terminus a quo for limitation.—The period of limitation within which a decree may be executed is twelve years from—

- (a) the date of the decree, or
- (b) the date of default in respect of the payment of money or the delivery of property when such payment or delivery has been ordered to be made at a certain date or at recurring periods, either by the decree or by any subsequent order

Date of decree—The decree capable of execution is the decree of the Court of first instance until appeal and after that the decree of the Court of last instance, see note 'What decree may be executed' under sec 36 above If the decree is that of a Court of first instance the period runs from the date of the decree. If there is a preliminary decree and a final decree the two must be read together and the date is the date of the final decree (w). If the decree to be executed is an appellate decree the period runs from the date of the appellate decree whether it affirms, sets aside or modifies the original decree (x), but not if no appeal lies (y) or if the appeal is dismissed for default (z). The words 'or of the decree (if any) on appeal affirming the same' in sec 230 of the last Code have been omitted as misleading being open to the construction that where the original decree was modified or set aside on appeal the period of twelve years was to run from the date of the original decree. Where a decree is passed in favour of the plaintiff against the defendant, and part of the decree is appealed from and the rest is not, the period of 12 years prescribed by this section runs from the date of the appellate decree both as regards the application to execute the portion appealed from and the portion not appealed from. The reason is that there is only one decree that can be executed, and that is the decree of the appellate Court (a). Where a decree is passed not jointly, but severally against two or more defendants, and one of the defendants appeals from the decree, the period of 12 years as against the other defendants is to be computed from the date of the original decree (b), while as against the appellant defendant it is to be computed from the date of the appellate decree. Where a second appeal is preferred to the High Court from a decree passed in first appeal, and an order is made by the High Court declaring the appeal before it to have abated, the period of twelve years under this section runs from the date of that order, and not from the date on which the decree was passed in first appeal (c). The twelve years rule was applied to applications for order absolute under section 89 of the Transfer of Property Act (d). Under O 34, r 5, however, such applications are not execution applications, and the order absolute is now the decree absolute or the final decree and time runs from its date however informally it may be drawn up (e).

Amendment of decree does not extend the period—Under article 182 (4) of the Limitation Act, 1908, if the decree has been amended the period of limitation runs from the date of the amended decree. There is no such provision in this section and an amendment of the decree does not extend the period of twelve years (f).

Date of default—The date of decree is not always the starting point for limitation. When the decree or any subsequent order directs payment of money or delivery of property at a certain date or at recurring periods, the twelve years run from the date of default. The words "recurring periods" have been inserted to give effect to decisions (g) which read these words into sec 230 of the Code of 1882. Therefore if the decree is for annual or monthly payments or for payment by instalments, time runs from the date of default as to each instalment (h). Thus if a decree dated the 1st January 1913 directs payment to be made annually, the first payment will fall due on the 1st January 1914, the second on the 1st January 1915, and so on, and the decree holder will be at liberty to execute for each instalment as it falls due and the period of twelve years will run for the first from the 1st January 1914, and for the second from the 1st January 1915 and so on. But if the decree provides that on default of payment of any one instalment the whole amount shall become payable at once, the decree on such default ceases to be an instalment decree, the decree holder cannot execute for each instalment and the twelve years period runs for the whole amount from the date of default (i)

By a decree dated 17th November 1897 the defendant is directed inter alia to pay Rs 6,000 forthwith to the plaintiff. On 28th January 1899 the decree is amended in some other respects. Several applications for executions are made and the decree is thus kept alive. On 2nd December 1909, that is, more than 12 years after the date of the original decree, but within 12 years from the date of the amended decree, the plaintiff applies for execution. The sum of Rs 6,000 being directed by the original decree to be paid forthwith, the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the original decree, and the application is barred so far as it relates to that sum (j)

Combined mortgage decree.—In Khulna Loan Co v Jnanendranath (l) the decree was a combined mortgage decree against person and property which directed that in default of payment within a definite time the property should be sold and that if the proceeds of the sale were insufficient the balance should be realised from the mortgagor personally. The Privy Council approved the decision of the Calcutta High Court that the period of twelve years for enforcing the personal remedy runs from the date of the decree and not from the date of the sale of the mortgaged property. This was followed in a Madras case (l), but the Court said that 'if an order was passed after the property had been sold that for the balance other properties of the mortgagors should be proceeded against the present application would be in time, but no such order was passed and therefore the application is barred by sec 48 of the Civil Procedure Code'. In an earlier case, however, the Madras High Court had construed such a decree as being properly speaking two decrees and that the period of twelve years under sec 48 for the decree against the other properties of the mortgagor runs from the date when the mortgaged properties are sold and the sale proceeds are found insufficient (m)

Decree directing mesne profits to be ascertained in execution.—In a case where the decree directed mesne profits to be ascertained in execution the Madras High Court felt constrained by the decision of the Privy Council in Khulna Loan Co v Jnanendranath (n) to hold that the period of twelve years under this section runs from the date of the decree and not from the time when the mesne profits are ascertained (o). The Court while yielding to the authority of the Privy Council decision was inclined to take the view suggested by another decision of the Privy Council with reference to article 182 of the Limitation Act that the period would not begin to run until the decree was in such a form as to render it capable of being enforced (p)

Decree directing maintenance to be ascertained in execution.—In the case of a decree directing mesne profits to be ascertained in execution Patkar, J, said 'I think the decree passed by the High Court was not an executable decree until the amount of the maintenance was determined and therefore section 48 would have no application until the amount was determined' (q). The learned Judge distinguished Khulna Loan Co v Jnanendranath (r) for the reason that the mortgage decree was probably an executable decree for the payment of money, and approved of a previous decision of the

Bombay High Court that section 48 relates to a decree which is executable at that date in respect of the application made (a)

Decree directing recovery from one party on failure to recover from another.—Where a decree for the payment of money is passed against A and B and the decree directs that the plaintiff should in the first instance recover the decretal amount from A and that he should proceed against B only on failure to recover the amount from A the period of twelve years under this section runs from the date of the decree and not from the time when A fails to pay the decretal amount (i)

"Any subsequent order."—The subsequent order must be an order in the suit in which the decree is made. In Paya Kartyanand v. Prithvi Chand (u) A obtained a money decree on the 1st April 1914 and kept the decree alive by a series of applications for execution. In January 1920 a receiver was appointed of the property of the judgment-debtor in another suit which was in the nature of an administration suit. On the 31st January 1920 the decree holder applied in that suit and obtained an order for periodical payment to him by the receiver. There still remained a balance due to the decree-holder, and after several infructuous applications for execution, he applied for execution against the judgment debtor's surety on the 13th July 1927. This was more than 12 years after the date of the decree, but it was contended that the order on the receiver of the 31st January 1920 was a subsequent order which gave a fresh period to the decree holder. The Privy Council repelled this contention saying: "Their Lordships are of opinion that on the true construction of the section, the subsequent order must be an order in the suit in which the decree is made and an order which directs payment by the debtor or the surety of money in respect of the judgment debt. The order of 31st January 1920 satisfies none of these conditions."

As an execution proceeding is a continuation of a suit and as an order directing payment by a surety would ordinarily be made in execution proceedings, it would appear that an order made by a Court in execution may be a subsequent order under s. 48 (1) (b). This was the view taken by the Bombay High Court (t). But other High Courts have held that the subsequent order must be an order of the Court which passed the decree and acting as such Court and not an order of a Court executing a decree (w). Thus the Allahabad High Court has held that an order under O 20, r. 11 (2), postponing payment or directing payment by instalments is a subsequent order within the meaning of the section, but not an order by the Court of execution granting time for payment (x).

When a decree for maintenance directed the amount of maintenance to be ascertained in execution the Bombay High Court held that the order fixing the amount of maintenance was a subsequent order which gave a fresh starting point for limitation (y). On the other hand the Madras High Court has held that when a decree for mesne profits directed the mesne profits to be ascertained in execution, the order fixing the amount of mesne profits was not a subsequent order under this section (z).

Can a compromise, effected in execution proceedings, be enforced by execution as superseding the decree?—A money decree was passed on the 17th December 1913 and in the course of execution proceedings a compromise was effected on the 16th September 1922 under which the decree holder remitted part of the decretal amount and agreed to accept payment by instalments with a proviso that in default of one instalment the decree holder would be entitled to realise the amount in execution. Application for execution was made on the 8th November 1926 within three years of due date for the payment of instalments. The application was more than twelve years from the date of the decree of 1913 but it was held that the application was within time as an application to execute the substituted decree of 1922. The usual procedure for enforcing the compromise agreement would be by suit but the Calcutta High Court held following the case of Pisani v Attorney General of Gibraltar (a) that when there is no inherent want of jurisdiction in a Court in the subject matter before it or with regard to the person the parties by agreement may arrange their own procedure and may give jurisdiction to the Court to adopt that procedure (b). On the other hand a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has dissented from the Calcutta High Court and has held that an agreement in compromise of a decree cannot be entertained in execution (c). The grounds of dissent are that a decree if altered by consent of parties cannot be executed (d) that the function of a Court of execution is to execute the decree as it stands and that O 23 r 4, makes the provisions of O 23 r 3 as to compromise of suits inapplicable to execution proceedings. According to the Allahabad High Court the twelve year period in section 48 cannot be extended by a compromise in the course of execution proceedings.

Fresh application presented after the expiration of twelve years —

These words make it quite clear that all that the section requires is the presenting of the fresh application within twelve years from the date of the decree. The order on the fresh application may be made after the expiration of twelve years. The section does not preclude the Court from making an order for execution after the expiration of twelve years if the application was presented within that period. In fact, it was so held by the High Court of Madras under the corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (e). See notes above, Fresh application.

Decree not being a decree granting an injunction — The operation of the twelve years rule laid down in this section is now extended to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction. Under s 230 of the Code of 1882, the rule was confined to decrees for the payment of money and decrees for the delivery of other property. Under that section the question was raised whether a mortgage decree was a decree for the payment of money, and the decisions were not uniform. The present section applies to money decrees as well as mortgage decrees in fact to all decrees except decrees granting an injunction (f).

Whether section retrospective — A obtains a mortgage decree against B in 1900, that is before the present Code came into force. A applies for execution of the decree from time to time and the last of such applications is made in 1914 that is more than 1 year after the date of the decree. Is execution of the decree barred under this section regard being had to the fact that the old section did not apply to mortgage decrees though the present section does? All the High Courts are now agreed that it is barred as the section applies to mortgage-decrees and the law of limitation applicable to a suit or proceeding is that in force at the date of its institution (g).

Fraud—'Fraud' or 'force' on the part of a judgment debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation (h). The word "fraud" in this section should not be narrowly interpreted (i). The fraud dealt with by this section is such as prevents the execution of the decree within twelve years and judges ought to take a broad view of conduct deliberately adopted by judgment debtors with a view to defeating and delaying the just payment of their debts by frivolous and futile objections which are dishonest upon the face of them (j). Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of movable property (k), or evading arrest by any contrivance, or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant (l) is "fraud" within the meaning of this section. But the mere fact that there has been a prolongation of execution proceedings due in part to frivolous objections raised by the judgment debtor does not constitute fraud (m). A fictitious transfer of his property made by a judgment-debtor to defeat or delay execution is fraud (n). If the judgment debtor presents an application to set aside a decree passed ex parte against him with the sole object of delaying execution proceedings he is guilty of 'fraud' within the meaning of this section (o). But though the Court has the power to grant execution after the expiration of twelve years from the date of the decree on the ground of fraud or force on the part of the judgment debtor, the Court should not use that power unless it is satisfied that the decree holder on his part had been diligent in proceeding with execution since the date of the decree (p). It is doubtful whether the fraud of one of several judgment-debtors keeps the decree alive against all of them (q).

Limitation Act, section 4 is applicable—When the twelve years period expired on a day on which the Court was closed, the Calcutta High Court applied section 4 of the Limitation Act on the principle that when a party is prevented from doing a thing on a particular day by the act of the Court, he is entitled to do it at the first available opportunity (r).

Limitation Act, section 15 (1) is not applicable—Sec 15 (1) of the Limitation Act, 1908, cannot be applied in computing the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (s).

Limitation Act, Articles 181 and 182 apply to applications made within the twelve year period—Articles 181 and 182 of the Limitation Act, 1908, exclude applications not provided for by section 48. This means that these Articles refer to applications made within the twelve years' period and not liable to be dismissed under this section (t).

Minority—A decree is passed in August 1897 on behalf of a minor in a suit brought by his guardian for partition and mesne profits. Various applications for execution are made by the minor through his guardian within 3 years of each other. The period of 12 years prescribed by this section expires in August 1909. The minor attains majority in November 1909, and in November 1910 he applies for execution of the decree, and claims an extension of the period on the ground of minority. Is he entitled to any extension either under sec 6 of the Limitation Act, 1908, or under any other law? The High Court of Madras answered the quest on in the negative on the ground that sec 6 of the Limitation Act is expressly limited to cases where the limitation is provided in the Limitation Act itself, and that there is no law apart from the said sec 6 under which minority is a ground of exemption from the operation of the law of limitation (u) The High Court of Bombay agrees with the Madras High Court in holding that sec 6 of the Limitation Act applies only to cases dealt with by the Act itself, but differs from that Court in that it holds that the minor is entitled to an extension of the period under the general principle of law that time does not run against a minor (v) The same Court has held that where the decree has been obtained in the first instance by an adult, the fact that the decree on his death passes to an heir who is a minor does not extend the period of 12 years prescribed by the present section (w) The latter case was decided under the Limitation Act for it was said that time having begun to run against the decree holder the subsequent disability of the minor heir was under that Act ineffectual to stop it The Lahore Court does not apply section 6 of the Limitation Act on the ground that sec 48 is enacted for the benefit of the judgment debtor in order that he should not be harassed for ever by execution proceedings (x) The High Court of Allahabad has followed the Madras decision (y)

Where decree transferred for execution—The Court to which a decree is transferred for execution has power to determine whether execution is barred under this section (z)

Execution by Collector—Period of management excluded.—The words “period of limitation” in para 11 (3) of Schedule III to this Code are not confined to periods of limitation prescribed by the Limitation Act The period during which the Collector is acting under that Schedule is excluded in calculating the twelve years period under this section (a)

Provincial Insolvency Act—Period from adjudication to annulment excluded—Section 78 (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act is not confined to periods of limitation under the Limitation Act If the decretal debt is one provable and proved under that Act and the adjudication is subsequently annulled, the period from the date of the order of adjudication to the date of the order of annulment is excluded in computing the twelve year period under this section (b)

Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act 17 of 1879—In computing the period of 12 years provided by this section, the time taken up in procuring a conciliator's certificate as required by the D A R Act is to be excluded (c) A decree for sale on a mortgage passed under that Act does not require to be made absolute, hence the period of 12 years is to be computed from the date of the decree, and not from the date of the order making the decree absolute (d)

Equity of judgment debtor—This is the same principle as that enacted in sec 132 of the Transfer of Property Act 1882. A right of set-off is an equity, and if the judgment debtor has the right to set off a cross decree under O 21, r 18, he has this right also against the transferee of the decree holder (c). The section applies to all decrees including mortgage decrees (f).

Illustrations

1. I holds a decree against B for Rs 5000. B holds a decree against A for Rs 3000. I transfers his decree to C. C cannot execute the decree against B for more than Rs 2,000 (g).

2. I obtains a decree against B for Rs 5000. B then sues A to recover Rs 2000. Pending B's suit, C obtains a transfer of I's decree with notice of B's suit. A decree is then passed for B in his suit against I. C applies for execution against B of the whole decree for Rs 5000. He is not entitled to execute the decree for more than Rs 3000 as the transfer was taken with notice of B's suit (h).

The second illustration is the case of Kristo Ramani v Kedarnath (i) in which it was assumed that the assignee must have notice of the equity. It is submitted, however, that it matters not that the assignee was unaware of the equity provided it was existing at the time of the assignment, see sec 132 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, illustration (1) and the case of Monmohan v Dwarka Nath (j). In the latter case the Court said "Under section 49 of the Code, the assignee [of a decree] stands in no better position than the assignor and takes it subject to all the equities and defences, subsisting at the time of the assignment, which the judgment debtor could have asserted against it in the hands of the judgment creditor, notwithstanding that the assignee may have had no notice thereof." If the equity is not existing at the time of the assignment there is no right of set off (k).

50. [S. 234] (1) Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased.

(2) Where the decree is executed against such legal representative, he shall be liable only to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of; and, for the purpose of ascertaining such liability, the Court executing the decree may, of its own motion or on the application of the decree-holder, compel such legal representative to produce such accounts as it thinks fit.

Changes in the law—The present section differs from the corresponding section 234 of the Code of 1882, in one respect, viz., that the words fully satisfied have been substituted for the words fully executed. See notes below under the head Before the decree has been fully satisfied.

Judgment debtor dies—This refers to natural death and not to civil death. If the judgment debtor becomes a sanyasi his son is not his legal representative (l)

Extent of liability of legal representative—This section enables a decree holder to execute his decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor. The property that can be attached is the property of the judgment debtor found in the hands of the representative, and the property of the representative, from whatever source derived to the extent of that which he has wasted out of the assets come to his hands without satisfying the debts of the deceased (m)

The liability of a legal representative in execution proceedings is confined to the property of the deceased which has actually come to his hands. If the decree holder seeks to make the legal representative answerable also for the property of the deceased which with due diligence on his part would have come to his hands, his proper remedy is by way of suit against the legal representative, and not by proceedings in execution under this section (n)

The extent of the liability of the legal representative is decided by the Court executing the decree and the Court may call for an account of the property of the judgment debtor that has come into the hands of the legal representative. The decree holder must prove in the first instance that some assets have come to the legal representative and the onus is then shifted to the latter to shew how the assets including rents and profits have been applied (o)

A decree holder is entitled under this section to have the amount of the decree paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative which have not yet been duly disposed of. Hence the legal representative is bound to pay to the decree holder the full amount of the decree though there may be other creditors of the deceased and the assets may not be sufficient to pay them all in full (p)

Legal representative—Legal representative means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased [see s. 2 cl. (11)]. Thus where a judgment debtor dies and a stranger takes possession of his property, the decree may be executed against the stranger for he is a legal representative within the meaning of this section, see note

Legal representative under sec. 2 (11) (g) A residuary legatee in possession of the judgment debtor's estate is his legal representative although letters of administration have not yet been issued to him (r). The purchaser of the business of a firm against which a decree has been issued is not the legal representative of the firm within the meaning of this section. The decree against the firm cannot therefore be executed against the purchaser (s)

"Before the decree has been fully satisfied."—The corresponding section of the Code of 1882 (s. 234) provided in effect that if a judgment debtor died before the decree had been fully executed the holder of the decree might apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased. This gave rise to the question as to when a decree could be said to be 'fully executed'. It was held by the High Court of Madras that a decree could not be said to be fully executed until the property attached was sold, and that if the judgment debtor died before sale his legal representatives ought to be brought on the record, and if the property was sold without the legal representatives being brought on the record the sale was absolutely void (t). On the other hand, it was held by the High Court of Allahabad that once the property was attached the decree was fully executed and that it was not necessary to bring the legal representatives on the record and a sale held in their absence was not void. The latter decisions were based on the ground that once a property was attached, it was in the hands of the law, and the attachment did not abate on the death of the judgment debtor (u). At the same time there were cases in which it was held that omission to bring the legal representatives on the record did not vitiate the sale, but was at most an irregularity within the meaning of sec 311 of the Code of 1882 [now O 21, r 90] (v). It was to remove this conflict of decisions that the word "satisfied" has been substituted in the present section for the word "executed". The effect of this alteration in the language is to supercede the Allahabad decisions in so far as they hold that after attachment it was not necessary to bring the legal representatives on the record, for a decree cannot be said to be fully "satisfied" merely because the property was attached. Under the present section if the judgment debtor dies after attachment, his legal representatives may be brought on the record. At the same time it has been held that omission to bring the legal representatives on the record does not render the sale void, but amounts merely to an irregularity within O 21, r 90, and the sale will not be set aside unless substantial injury is proved (u).

Before the decree has been passed—A decree against a person who has died pending the suit without his legal representatives being brought on the record is a nullity and cannot be executed against the legal representatives (x). But a decree passed by the Privy Council in ignorance of the death of a respondent is not a nullity (y). In such a case it has been held that the decree of the Privy Council may be executed under this section against the property of the judgment debtor in the hands of his legal representatives (z).

"May apply to execute the decree against the legal representative"—Where execution proceedings have been commenced against a judgment debtor, they can be continued after his death by substituting the name of the legal representative in place of that of the judgment debtor in the application for execution already on the files of the Court. It is not necessary to file a fresh application for execution under O 21, r 11 (a). See O 22, r 12. At the same time notice should be given to the legal representative under O 21, r 22. If such notice has been served on the legal representative the order substituting his name can be made ex parte (b).

To which Court application should be made—The application to execute the decree against a legal representative of the judgment-debtor should be made to the Court

- (c) by arrest and detention in prison ;
- (d) by appointing a receiver ; or
- (e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require.

Simultaneous execution—Simultaneous execution both against the property and person of the judgment debtor is allowed under O 21, r 30. But the Court has discretion under O 21, r 21, to refuse simultaneous execution and to allow the decree holder to avail himself of only one mode of execution at a time. The Privy Council has said that ' the difficulties of a litigant in India begin when he has obtained a decree ' (1), and the Court is not justified in refusing execution against the person on the ground that the decree holder should first proceed against the property (2)

Receiver in execution proceedings.—The appointment of a receiver in execution proceedings is a form of equitable relief which is granted on the ground that there is no effective remedy by execution at law (m). The appointment of a receiver in execution is therefore not a matter of right, and a proper case must be made out to justify the exercise by the Court of its discretion to make the appointment (n). The discretion is regulated by the provisions of O 40, r 1, and clause (a) of that rule has been altered to allow the Court to appoint a receiver after decree (o). The Court must be satisfied that the appointment of a receiver is likely to benefit both the decree holder and the judgment debtor rather than a sale of the attached property, and for this reason a receiver has been appointed to realise an attached decree (p), to realise a debt attached in execution of a decree (q), to collect the rents of an attached property (r), and to realise a decree for maintenance charged upon immovable property (s). Again the Court must be satisfied that the decree is likely to be realised within a reasonable time from the attached properties so that the judgment debtor may not be burdened with property while he is deprived of the enjoyment of it (t)

In Ma Mya v Ma Mi Aye (u) a third share of certain promissory notes had to be realised in execution and the Privy Council said that the right method of working out the decree was by the appointment of a receiver. Again in Hasif Ali v Kernani Bank (v) the Privy Council upheld the appointment of a receiver to collect the rents and profits of properties which had been settled upon the Nawab of Murshedabad and his lineal descendants by the Murshedabad Act 15 of 1891, although the receiver was liable to be superseded by the Secretary of State in exercise of a power reserved under the Act to apply the rents and profits to the maintenance of the position and dignity of the Nawab.

Court may appoint receiver of property outside its local jurisdiction—The Court may appoint a receiver of property outside the local limits of its territorial jurisdiction. The principle by which the action of a Court in effecting sales in execution is confined to property situate within its territorial jurisdiction is prima facie not applicable

2 to a sale by a receiver which need not necessarily be a sale by public auction as distinct from private treaty (1c)

Receiver of future maintenance—The Privy Council has held that though a right to future maintenance cannot be attached [s 60 (1) (n)] the Court may in a proper case e.g., where provision is made for the maintenance of the judgment-debtor out of the income of villages appoint a receiver for realizing the rents, and paying thereout to the judgment debtor a sum sufficient for his maintenance and the balance to the decree holder (x) The Bombay High Court doubts whether the property in the Privy Council decision was really covered by the expression 'a right of future maintenance' and holds that property which is at law unattachable cannot be realized by equitable execution (y) The Madras High Court has followed the Privy Council decision and appointed a receiver of future maintenance (z), but in an earlier decision it had held that a receiver could not be appointed as a right of future maintenance cannot be attached (a)

Appeal—I obtains a decree against B By consent of parties C is appointed receiver to take charge of certain properties for the execution of the decree A then applies to the Court for the discharge of C as receiver, but the application is refused The order is one relating to execution within the meaning of sec 47, and is therefore appealable (b)

Clause (e)—This clause does not authorize a Court to read into a decree a supplementary or alternative relief which is not in the decree Thus where a decree in a suit for redemption directs the defendant mortgagee to deliver to the plaintiff mortgagor the documents of title relating to the mortgaged property, but does not provide for an alternative relief, the Court has no power under this clause to award damages in execution (c) This conclusion might have been arrived at on the simple ground that a Court executing a decree has no power to add to the terms of a decree

Scope of the section—Section 50 provides for the case where a decree has been passed against a party and the party dies before the decree is fully satisfied, and the decree is sought to be executed against his legal representative. The present section provides for the case where a decree is passed against the legal representative of a deceased person. In the latter case the legal representative is the judgment debtor (d), and if the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, the section allows the decree to be executed against the property of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative (e). But in so far as the property of the deceased which has come into the hands of the legal representative has not been "duly" applied by him, the decree may be executed against the legal representative as if the decree was to that extent passed against him personally. An executor or administrator under the Indian Succession Act, 1925, s. 323, is bound to pay the creditors of the deceased "equally and rateably", if he fails to do so, he cannot be said to have applied the assets "duly" within the meaning of this section, and he will be personally liable to the extent to which he has not done so. To ascertain whether the assets have been duly applied the Court of execution may direct an inquiry into the accounts of the executor or administrator (f). The executor or administrator may shew that he is not liable as he has duly applied the property of the deceased which has come into his possession. This is called in English law the plea of plene administravit. In an Allahabad case (g) Ashworth, J., differing from Mukerji, J., held that the plea could be raised in the suit itself. If the executor or administrator has paid a legacy and left no assets for the payment to the decree holder, the latter has also his remedy under sec. 361 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925, and may require the legatee to refund. But this remedy must be exercised by suit, and the decree holder cannot in execution of a decree against the executor or administrator attach property which he has parted with to a specific legatee (h).

If the legal representative is the heir of a deceased Hindu or Mahomedan every payment by the heir on account of debts due by the deceased would be a due application of the assets, whether the debts were paid rateably or not. There is no analogy between the case of an executor or administrator governed by the provisions of the Indian Succession Act and of an heir as a legal representative under the Hindu or Mahomedan law (i).

Legal representative—"Legal representative" means a person who in law represents the estate of a deceased person, and includes any person who intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, and, where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued (j). See s. 2 (11) and notes.

As to how far a decree passed against one of several Mahomedan heirs binds the other heirs, see Mulla's Principles of Mahomedan Law, 10th ed., pp. 20-23, and the under noted case (k).

As to the liability of Hindu sons for their father's debts, see s. 53 below.

Out of the property of the deceased—The expression 'property' includes the income of immovable property though it cannot be both attached and sold (l).

his father which is not tainted by illegality or immorality. Sec. 51 is not limited to the execution of decrees for debt but applies to all decrees. Sec. 53 appears to have been enacted to explain the meaning of the expression 'property of the deceased' which occurs in secs. 50 and 52. If sec. 53 is considered to be not descriptive but limitative and confined to a decree for debt, and if a joint son is not considered to be the legal representative of his father under sec. 50, a decree for possession or a decree other than decree for a debt obtained against a father in a joint Hindu family would not be enforceable in execution against the son who is joint with his father and is brought on the record as his legal representative. In this case the Bombay High Court held that a decree for an injunction passed against a father as manager of a joint Hindu family could be executed against a son who had taken the family property by survivorship. In the previous case (a) such an execution was refused and the son who had taken joint family property by survivorship was held not to be the legal representative of his father, but this case was distinguished on the ground that the decree was against the father personally and not as representing the family. Similarly in the case of money decree—if the decree is against a coparcener personally, it cannot be executed after his death, against another coparcener who has taken the property by survivorship, if he is neither a son nor grandson but a nephew who is under no obligation to pay the debt of the deceased (1).

Decree—The section is not limited to money decrees but applies to all decrees (u)

Liability of ancestral property in execution proceedings—Under the Hindu law when a son or grandson takes any ancestral property by survivorship, he is bound to pay out of such property all debts including judgments, of his ancestor not incurred for immoral or illegal purposes. In the case of a decree against a Hindu father there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882 as to the procedure for enforcing this liability. The section is new and settles this question of procedure (v) We proceed to consider the subject under the following four heads —

1 Where a money decree has been passed against the father and the father dies before issue of execution — A and his sons B and C constitute a joint Hindu family owning an ancestral house D obtains a decree against A for Rs 5,000 A dies, and on his death B and C take the ancestral property by survivorship D (whose remedy is not confined to the one third share of the father) (iv) applies for execution of the decree against B and C by attachment and sale of the whole of the family house Is he entitled to do so or must he institute a fresh suit against B and C to recover the debt? According to the procedure prescribed by this Code, D should bring B and C on the record as the legal representatives of A under sec 50, and then apply under that section to the Court which passed the decree to execute it against B and C to the extent of the ancestral property come to their hands The words in sec 50 are to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his [legal representative's] hands According to the present section the ancestral property in the hands of B and C being liable under Hindu law for the payment of A's debts, is deemed for the purposes of sec 50, to be the property of the deceased which has come to the hands of B and C as the legal representatives of A If B and C object that the debt in respect of which the decree was passed was tainted with immorality, the question is one relating to the execution of the decree between the decree holder and the representative of the judgment debtor within the meaning of sec 47 and it should be determined by the Court executing the decree (x) This coincides with the view taken by the High Courts of Bombay and Calcutta under the Code of 1882 (y) According to the Madras and Allahabad decisions under that Code, a decree against a Hindu father could not be executed against ancestral property in the hands of the sons, even to the extent of the father's interest in the property, and the only remedy of the decree holder was to institute a regular suit against the sons. This view proceeded on the ground that the question whether the debts were tainted with immorality was not one that could be gone into in execution proceedings and that the sons were not the "legal representatives" of their father so far as the ancestral property was concerned within the meaning of sec. 231 of the Code of 1882 (z) These decisions are no longer law

2 If here a money decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies after attachment but before sale of the ancestral property—All the High Courts are agreed that where the father dies after attachment of the ancestral property, the proceedings in execution can be continued against the sons (a) In fact, having regard to the provisions of the present section, a separate suit against the sons would be barred by sec. 47.

3. If here a mortgage decree has been passed against the father, and the father dies before sale of the mortgaged property—Where a decree is obtained against the father for sale of ancestral property mortgaged by him, and he dies before sale, the proceedings in execution may be continued against the sons. But the sons, not being parties to the suit, are entitled to raise in execution proceedings such questions as they could have raised if they had been made parties (b) They can dispute the factum of the debt, or they can show that the debt was incurred for immoral purposes and is not therefore binding on the property (c) See notes to O 34, r 1, "Mortgage of joint family property"

4 Where a decree has been passed against the sons in respect of their father's debt for payment of the debt out of the ancestral property—In such a case, the decree-holder may proceed to execute the decree by attachment and sale of the ancestral property come to the hands of the sons. The proceedings would be under sec. 52 The expression "property of the deceased" in that section would be construed in the light of the present section. In fact, sec. 53 is an Explanation to secs 50 and 52, explaining the meaning of the expression "property of the deceased."

It will be seen that, under the present Code, a creditor can follow the property in the hands of the sons or grandsons in execution not only in cases (2), (3) and (4), but also in case (1) estate, the partition of the estate or the separation of the share shall be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in this behalf in accordance with the law (if any) for the time being in force relating to the partition, or the separate possession of shares, of such estates.

Partition by Collector—This section is a reproduction of sec 263 of the Code of 1882 with a few verbal alterations. Where a decree has been passed for partition or for separate possession of a share of an estate of the description mentioned in this section, the proper authority to effect the partition or to deliver possession of the share is the Collector, the Court has no power to do so (d)

Application of the section—If a decree is for the partition of an undivided estate assessed to the payment of revenue to Government, the section requires that the partition should be carried out by the Collector. In a case decided by a Full Bench of the High Court of Calcutta there was a dictum to the effect that the section only applies to a decree which directs distribution of revenue as well as a division of land (e). There is however nothing in the section which so limits its operation. In Abdul Razak v Shreenath Ghosh (f) Rankin, C J, said "It is idle to say that it is open to the plaintiff to insist that it be carried out by a commissioner under the civil Court merely because he has not asked for partition of the revenue. Whether he has asked for partition of the revenue or not, if he has a right to the partition of an undivided estate, his right is to a complete partition and it is certainly the right of any other party to object to an incomplete partition which would leave his interest at the mercy of the plaintiff, if the plaintiff makes default in paying his share."

The section does not apply to the partition of a mouza which is part of a revenue paying estate (g). In such a case the object of the suit is not to have the parent estate divided into several separate estates but only to divide the lands of the mouza among persons who are jointly interested in them (h).

For the separate possession of a share of such an estate—These words refer to the case of a man whose right is to the possession of an aliquot portion or share of the whole estate considered as one. In such a case the partition is made by the Collector, as it is the duty of the Collector to see that the proper share of the revenue is put upon the particular land or share of land (i).

Partition—The term "partition" in this section is not confined to a mere division of the lands in question into the requisite parts but includes the delivery of the shares to their respective allottees (j).

Jurisdiction of Court to control Collector's action—Where a decree relates to an estate of the kind mentioned in this section it should declare the rights of the several parties interested in the property, but should direct the actual partition or separation to be made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector deputed by him in that behalf (k) [see O 20, r 18]. This section places the execution of the decree entirely in the hands of the Collector. But if the Collector contravenes the decretal command of the Court, or transgresses the law for the time being in force, relating to partition, his action is subject to the control and correction of the Court which passed the decree and sent it to him for execution (f). In such a case, the aggrieved party should proceed by an application under s. 47, and not by a separate suit (m). Where a Collector has made a partition, there is nothing to prevent him from reversing the partition for mistake or other causes before he has passed final orders and returned the proceedings to the Court (n).

The High Court of Bombay has held that an objection that the Collector has made an unequal partition is no ground for interference by the Court with the order passed by the Collector (o). But in a Madras case, where all the parties objected to a partition effected by the Collector on the ground that it was unequal the Court held that it had power to entertain the objection (p).

"Estate"—The word "estate" is here used in its ordinary sense (q). Shera lands, that is lands held under a lease from Government for a fixed period, come within the terms of this section as revenue paying lands (r). But isolated plots of land which fall short of being the share of a co sharer of a mahal do not (s). A rayatwari holding has been held not to be an "estate" within the meaning of this section (t).

"Estate assessed to the payment of revenue"—This section refers to estates assessed to revenue in one lump sum for the whole estate and not to estates, like the ordinary paddy land holding in Burma, which are assessed at acre rates (u). A mouza is generally part of a revenue paying estate, but is not itself an estate assessed to the payment of revenue (t).

ARREST AND DETENTION.

in execution of a decree at any hour and on any day, and shall, as soon as practicable, be brought before the Court, and his detention may be in the civil prison of the district in which the Court ordering the detention is situate, or, where such civil prison does not afford suitable accommodation, in any other place which the Local Government may appoint for the detention of persons ordered by the Courts of such district to be detained :

Provided, firstly, that, for the purpose of making an arrest under this section, no dwelling-house shall be entered after sunset and before sunrise :

Provided, secondly, that no outer door of a dwelling-house shall be broken open unless such dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment-debtor and he refuses or in any way prevents access thereto, but when the officer authorised to make the arrest has duly gained access to any dwelling-house, he may break open the door of any room in which he has reason to believe the judgment debtor is to be found

Provided, thirdly, that, if the room is in the actual occupancy of a woman who is not the judgment-debtor and who according to the customs of the country does not appear in public, the officers authorized to make the arrest shall give notice to her that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing a reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, may enter the room for the purpose of making the arrest

Provided, fourthly, that, where the decree in execution of which a judgment debtor is arrested, is a decree for the payment of money and the judgment-debtor pays the amount of the decree and the costs of the arrest to the officer arresting him, such officer shall at once release him

(2) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, declare that any person or class of persons whose arrest might be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public shall not be liable to arrest in execution of a decree otherwise than in accordance with such procedure as may be prescribed by the Local Government in this behalf

(3) Where a judgment debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court, the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he may (iv) be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he complies with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force

(4) Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court may (x) release him from arrest, and, if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to civil prison in execution of the decree

See O 21 r 40 [proceedings on appearance of judgment debtor in obedience to notice or after arrest]

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with sec 336 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 Any outer door of a dwelling house may now be broken open to effect the arrest of a judgment debtor in execution of a decree. But the dwelling house must be in the occupancy of the judgment debtor. See sub section (1) proviso (2)
- 2 The security under sub sec (4) must not only be for the filing by the judgment debtor of a petition in insolvency, but also for his appearance, when called upon in any proceeding upon the application in insolvency or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested. See notes below Discharge of surety
- 3 A power has been conferred on the local Government to exempt certain persons from arrest. See sub section (2)

Breaking open of outer door—Under the Code of 1882 the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling house was strictly prohibited. This prohibition has now been removed to this extent that where a dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor and he refuses or prevents access thereto, the officer authorized to make the arrest may break open any outer door of such dwelling house. But this does not authorize him to break open the outer door of a dwelling house merely because the judgment debtor is to be found in that house. The prohibition above referred to as well as the prohibition against entering a dwelling house after sunset for effecting an arrest are to be traced to the maxim of English law that a man's house is his castle. Referring to this maxim Bentham wrote more than a century ago. This poetical expression is certainly no reason for if a man's house be his castle by night why not by day? The course of justice is sometimes interrupted in England by this puerile notion of liberty (y)

Sub section (2)—This sub section is new. It is intended to cover the cases of certain persons or classes of persons whose summary arrest might as in the case of railway servants, be attended with danger or inconvenience to the public

Sub section (4)—Insolvency after order for arrest—If a judgment debtor against whom an order for arrest has been made is adjudicated insolvent without a protection order, the adjudication does not prevent his arrest and the Court of execution must require the judgment debtor to give security under the latter part of sub section (4) that he will appear when called upon in any proceeding in insolvency or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested (z)

Sub section (4)—Expresses his intention to apply to be declared insolvent. This expression of intention is equivalent to a statement made to the judgment creditor

The word may was substituted for shall by Act 3 of 1931 (1930) s 113. T. J. J. of Legislation 2nd edn

(z) M. F. L. A. Fish v. Abdul Majid (1930) 3 Rang 18. 23 I C 281 (25) A R 302

by the judgment-debtor of an intention to suspend payment of his debts. It is therefore an act of insolvency as defined in sec. 9 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (a).

Sub section (4)—Within one month—The Court has no power to extend the period of one month for applying for a liquidation. Sec. 148 does not apply to such a case (b). The month is introduced into this section by way of defining the obligation of the surety. The intention expressed is an intention to be declared insolvent and not an intention to be declared insolvent at the end of a month provided nothing does turn up (c).

Sub section (4)—Discharge of surety—Under the Code of 1882, the security required was "that the judgment debtor will appear when called upon, and that he will, within one month apply under section 336 to be declared an insolvent. It was held upon the construction of those words that where a security bond provided that the surety would produce the judgment debtor when the Court should direct him to do so, the surety was released from his obligation under the bond when the judgment debtor filed a petition to be declared an insolvent. Neither the withdrawal of the petition nor failure to proceed with the petition, nor even failure on the part of the judgment debtor to appear in Court when the direction to appear was made subsequent to the filing of the petition, was held to affect the surety's discharge (d). And this was so even when a surety undertook that the judgment debtor would appear before the Court when called upon, and would within one month file a petition to be declared an insolvent (e). These decisions are no longer law. Sub section (4) now makes it clear that where a security bond is passed in the terms of that sub section, that is, where a surety undertakes (1) that the judgment debtor will within one month apply to be declared an insolvent, and (2) will appear, when called upon in any proceeding upon the application or upon the decree in execution of which he was arrested, the security will be realized when there is a failure to comply with either condition (f). The surety, however is not released by the mere filing by the judgment debtor of the petition in insolvency: the security continues until a final order is made on the petition (g). A bona fide petition is a sufficient compliance with the condition of the bond. When a bona fide petition was presented within one month but was rejected as not being in proper form and a fresh petition was presented later and the debtor was adjudged insolvent, the surety was discharged (h).

A surety under this section is discharged by the death of the judgment-debtor before breach of either of the two conditions mentioned above (i). But the death of the judgment debtor after the first condition has failed, namely, the undertaking to apply to be declared an insolvent within one month, cannot affect the surety's liability with regard to that condition (j). A surety is also discharged if the execution proceedings are struck off (k), but not if liability had already accrued under the bond by a breach of either of the two conditions before the proceedings were struck off (l). If the Court makes an erroneous order discharging a surety the decree holder may apply for revision of the order, but cannot treat it as a nullity (l).

Sub sec (4) provides that if the judgment debtor fails to apply or to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit the judgment debtor to prison. This is an alternative and not a concurrent remedy. It does not mean that the Court can proceed both against the surety and the judgment-debtor. If the surety is proceeded against and the amount is recovered from him the judgment-debtor cannot be committed to jail in execution. If the judgment-debtor is committed to jail, the position is just the same as if the surety had never come forward (m). But the mere fact that the judgment debtor is rearrested (n), or that a warrant is issued against him is not sufficient of itself to discharge the surety (o).

Realization of security—See sec 145

56. [S. 245A.] Notwithstanding anything in this Part, the Court shall not order the arrest or detention in the civil prison of a woman in execution of a decree for the payment of money.

Prohibition of arrest or detention of women in execution of decree for money Security for costs.—This section provides that a woman shall not be arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money. At the same time, if the plaintiff is a woman and her suit is for the payment of money, she may be required to give security for the defendant's costs. See O 23, r 1 (3).

57. [S. 338.] The Local Government may fix scales, graduated according to rank, race and nationality, of monthly allowances payable for the subsistence of judgment-debtors.

- (iv) on the omission by the person, on whose application he has been so detained, to pay subsistence allowance :

Provided, also, that he shall not be released from such detention under clause (ii) or clause (iii), without the order of the Court.

(2) A judgment-debtor released from detention under this section shall not merely by reason of his release be discharged from his debt, but he shall not be liable to be re-arrested under the decree in execution of which he was detained in the civil prison.

Period of detention in jail.—The first part of sub section (1) up to the words "six weeks" corresponds with sec 342 of the Code of 1882. The phraseology of that section, however, has now been altered to make it quite clear that the period of detention shall be (1) six months where the amount of the decree exceeds Rs 50 and (2) six weeks in any other case, and that the Court has no power to fix shorter periods than those prescribed in the section (p).

Re arrest.—The immunity of a judgment debtor from a second arrest depends not only upon his having been arrested but upon his having been detained in jail under the arrest. Thus where a judgment debtor, while acting as a pleader in Court, was arrested and discharged on the ground that he was exempt from arrest under sec 642 of the Code of 1882 (now sec 135), it was held that he was liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree against him (q). Similarly where a judgment debtor was arrested, but was liberated owing to non payment of subsistence money, it was held that he was liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree (r). Sub-section (2) refers to release from detention in jail.

Interim protection order.—A is arrested and committed to jail in execution of a decree against him. While in jail he files his petition in insolvency, and obtains an interim protection order for one week, and is thereupon released from jail. He then applies for a further protection order, but his application is refused. Is A liable to be re-arrested in execution of the same decree? The Calcutta High Court has held that he is not liable to be re-arrested, on the ground that a judgment debtor once discharged from jail cannot be arrested a second time in execution of the same decree (s). On the other hand the High Court of Bombay has held that A is liable to be re-arrested, as the only cases in which a judgment debtor is exempt from re-arrest are those specified in this section, and that release under an interim protection order is not one of them (t). The Calcutta decisions, it is submitted, are not correct.

Contempt of Court—This section does not apply to cases of imprisonment for contempt of Court (u)

59. [S. 653.] (1) At any time after a warrant for the arrest of a judgment debtor has been issued the Court may cancel it on the ground of his serious illness

Release on ground of illness

(2) Where a judgment debtor has been arrested, the Court may release him if, in its opinion, he is not in a fit state of health to be detained in the civil prison

(3) Where a judgment debtor has been committed to the civil prison, he may be released therefrom—

(a) by the Local Government, on the ground of the existence of any infectious or contagious disease, or

(b) by the committing Court, or any Court to which that Court is subordinate, on the ground of his suffering from any serious illness

(4) A judgment debtor released under this section may be re-arrested but the period of his detention in civil prison shall not in the aggregate exceed that prescribed by section 58

ATTACHMENT

60. [S. 266] (1) The following property is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree, namely, lands, houses, or other buildings, goods, money, banknotes, cheques, bills of exchange, hundis, promissory

Property liable to attachment and sale in execution of decree

notes, Government securities, bonds or other securities for money, debts, shares in a corporation and, save as hereinafter mentioned, all other saleable property, movable or immovable, belonging to the judgment debtor, or over which, or the profits of which, he has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit, whether the same be held in the name of the judgment debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf

(iii) one moiety of the salary in any other case

Provided that where the decree-holder is a society registered or deemed to be registered under the Co operative Societies Act, 1912, and the judgment-debtor is a member of the society, the provisions of sub-clauses (i) and (ii) shall be construed as if the word, ' twenty ' were substituted for the word ' forty ' wherever it occurs and the word ' forty ' for the word ' eighty '.

- (j) the pay and allowances of persons to whom the Indian Articles of War apply ,

- (p) where the judgment debtor is a person liable for the payment of land revenue, any movable property which, under any law for the time being applicable to him, is exempt from sale for the recovery of an arrear of such revenue

Explanation —The particulars mentioned in clauses (g), (h), (i), (j), (l) and (o) are exempt from attachment or sale whether before or after they are actually payable.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) from attachment, or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building, site or land

Changes introduced in previous law—This section corresponds with s 26f of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars—

- 1 In cl. (a) the words "cooking vessels, beds, and such personal ornaments as in accordance with religious usage cannot be parted with by any woman" have been added. See notes below.
- 2 The latter portion of cl. (b) relating to agricultural produce is new.
- 3 Cl. (c) stood as follows in s 26f of the Code of 1882—The materials of houses and other buildings belonging to and occupied by agriculturists.
- 4 In cl. (g) the words "or payable out of any service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India by the Governor General in Council in this behalf" have been added.
- 5 Cl. (h) is new. See notes below.
- 6 In cl. (i) the words "or allowances equal to salary" and "while on duty" have been added. See notes below.
- 7 Cl. (k) is new. See notes below.
- 8 In cl. (l) the words "whether payable in money or in kind" are new.
- 9 The alterations in sub-section (2) cl. (a) correspond with the alterations in sub-section (1) cl. (c).

Subsequent amendments of the section—Sub sec. (2) as it originally stood contained a clause (b) which ran thus—(b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force. That clause was repealed by Act 10 of 1914 Sch. II. See notes below. Salary of Army officers.

In clause (1) the word "forty" was substituted for "twenty" and the word "eighty" for "forty" by Act 26 of 1923.

The proviso to clause (1) was added by the Amending Act 20 of 1923.

In execution of a decree—The expression "decree" in this section refers to a money decree and not a mortgage decree for attachment is not necessary in mortgage decrees. The result is that the exemptions from attachment and sale contained in the proviso to this section do not apply to a mortgage decree for sale (c).

Saleable property—Subject to the proviso to sub-section (1) all saleable property which belongs to the judgment debtor may be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him. The equity of redemption of a mortgagor in mortgaged property is saleable property within the meaning of this section and is therefore liable to be attached and sold in execution of a decree against him (c). The share of a partner in a partnership business is saleable property and can be attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained against him by his creditor (x). The right to claim specific performance of a contract to sell land is also attachable and saleable (y). A life interest in trust funds is attachable and saleable in execution of a decree against the life tenant (z) Similarly a vested remainder can be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the remainderman (a)

The word 'saleable' in this section means saleable by auction at a compulsory sale under the orders of the Court. It has no reference to property made non transferable by an agreement between the parties to a transaction. It has accordingly been held that a condition in a permanent lease that the landlord would re enter if the tenant made any transfer of the land demised, does not make the land unsaleable in execution. The lease forbids a sale by the tenant, but does not prevent a sale by the Court (b) Country liquor is "saleable" property within the meaning of this section, though the permission of the Collector may be necessary to the sale under the Abkari Act (c)

Security for performance of duty—Money or other valuable security deposited as security for the due performance of duty by a servant with his master may be attached in execution of a decree against the servant, but the attachment will be subject to the lien which the master has upon the deposit, and the deposit cannot be sold until the same is at the disposal of the servant free from the lien of the master at the expiration of the period of employment (d)

Land assigned for maintenance—Where land was assigned to a Hindu widow for her maintenance with a proviso against alienation, it was held that she had no saleable interest in the usufruct (e)

Non transferable offices—A religious office is not saleable property (f) Similarly the right of managing a temple, of officiating at the worship conducted in it, and of receiving the offerings at the shrine, is not saleable (g) The right to officiate at funeral ceremonies is also not saleable (h) The property of a temple, cannot be sold away from the temple. But there is no objection to the sale of the right, title and interest of the servant of a temple in land belonging to the temple which he holds as remuneration for his service, the interest sold being subject in the hands of the alienee to determination by the death of the original holder, or by his removal from office for failure to perform the service (i)

Service of a public nature—Land burdened with the performance of a service of a public nature e.g., land held on Swastivachakam service tenure, is inalienable, and cannot be attached (j)

Chota Nagpur Encumbered Estates Act, 1896—Land released from management under the Chota Nagpur Estates Act, 1896 is under s. 12A of that Act inalienable during the lifetime of the holder without the sanction of the Commissioner. Without such sanction it cannot be attached and sold (l)

Restraint upon anticipation—The income of property subject to a restraint upon anticipation accruing due after the date of the judgment cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the separate property of a married woman passed under s. 8 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1874 (f) Right of residence—The right of a widow under the Hindu law to reside in her husband's family house is a purely personal right and cannot be transferred. Such right cannot be attached in execution as it is not "saleable property" (m). For other kinds of property which cannot be alienated, see Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 6.

Burmese Marriage Property—The interests of parties to a Burmese Buddhist marriage in the marriage property is an indeterminate interest and not saleable within the meaning of this section (n).

"Property"—A sues B for partnership accounts. The question of accounts is then referred to arbitration with the consent of the parties. Before the award is made, X, a creditor of A, applies for attachment of the "rights and interest" of A in the award. The attachment cannot be allowed for the expectant claim under an inchoate award is not property within the meaning of this section (o). Money paid into Court as a fine in a criminal case against a judgment debtor is, after the order imposing the fine is set aside, attachable under this section as money belonging to the judgment debtor even before the issue of a refund certificate (p).

The doors and windows of a building cannot be separately attached, for they have no separate existence as property (q). An unascertained right in unascertained property could not be the subject of attachment (r).

"Disposing power"—A property may not belong to a judgment debtor, and yet he may have a disposing power over it exercisable for his own benefit. In such cases the property is liable to attachment and sale subject to the proviso to this section.

Trustee of a charity—A trustee of a religious endowment has no disposing power over the corpus of the trust estate exercisable for his own benefit; hence the corpus cannot be attached (s).

Life interest—Where under a compromise with a reversioner a Hindu widow was allowed to keep certain property for her life, and she agreed not to alienate it, and on her death the property was to pass to the reversioner, it was held that she had no disposing power over the property (t).

Bonus sanctioned by railway company—A bonus sanctioned by a Railway Company to its servant is virtually a gift which must be completed either by a registered document or by actual payment as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act. A Railway Company sanctioned a bonus to A, and the amount was forwarded to the District Paymaster of the Company for payment to A. Before the amount was paid to A, it was attached in the hands of the Paymaster by a creditor of A. It was held that the amount could not be attached for the gift was not complete and A had therefore no disposing power over the money (u).

Delivery to post office—A sends a cover containing currency notes to the Post Office for delivery to B the addressee. Can the cover be attached while it is still in the Post Office by a creditor of B? It has been held that it can be attached the transmission being that the cover is in the disposing power of B. "When once the letter has been posted the property in it becomes vested in the addressee" (r)

Auctioneer—An auctioneer has no disposing power over the whole of the sale proceeds of goods sold by him, but only over that portion of it which represents his commission. Hence the whole of the sale proceeds in the hands of an auctioneer cannot be attached in execution of a decree against him, but only so much of it as represents his commission (u)

Life policy—Where a married man effects a policy on his own life, and the policy is expressed on the face of it to be for the benefit of his wife, or of his wife and children, or any of them, then, in cases to which the Married Women's Property Act, 1874, applies, the simple declaration on the face of the policy that the policy is for the benefit of his wife or children amounts to a trust for them, and the policy cannot be attached by his creditors [see s. 6 of the Act]. But in cases to which that Act does not apply, such a declaration is not sufficient to create a trust, and the insured has a disposing power over the policy for his own benefit and the policy may be attached by his creditors, unless it has been assigned as provided by s. 130 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, or a trust has been declared in respect thereof as provided by s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882. There was a conflict of opinion as to whether s. 5 of the Act applied to Hindus, for it was held by the High Court of Madras that it did (x) and by the High Courts of Bombay (y) and Calcutta (z), that it did not. But the Act has been amended [see Act 13 of 1923] and the provisions of that section are made applicable to policies of insurance effected by Hindus, Muhammadans, Sikhs or Jains in Madras after the 31st day of December, 1913 [being the year of the Madras decision] and in other parts of British India after the 1st day of April 1923 but nothing contained in the Amending Act is to affect any right or liability which has accrued or been incurred under any decree of a competent Court passed before the 1st day of April 1923.

"Debts"—Debts are expressly mentioned in the section and they are liable to attachment and sale. A debt is an obligation to pay a liquidated (or "specified") sum of money (a). Money that has not yet become due does not constitute a debt, for there is no obligation to pay that which has not yet become due. The word 'debt' in this section means an actually existing debt that is a perfected and absolute debt. Debt which has not become due is not a debt and cannot be attached (b). A sum of money which might, or might not become due or the payment of which depends upon contingencies which may or may not happen is not a debt (c). A money claim that has already become due is a debt, and it may be attached as such, though it may be payable at a future day, but a money claim accruing due is not a debt and cannot be attached. The attachment must operate at the time of the attachment and not be anticipatory, so as to fasten on a claim that may ripen into a debt at some future time (d). A mere right to receive profits the profits not having yet accrued due, is not attachable (e).

A debt that is enforceable only by a foreign Court is not liable to attachment under this section (f).

1 A delivers goods to his agent, B, for sale. B sells the goods, and receives the sale proceeds. The sale proceeds in the hands of B constitute a "debt" due to A, and they may therefore be attached while in B's hands in execution of a decree against A. Madho Das v Ramji (1894) 16 All 280

2 A is bound under a deed to pay a monthly allowance to B for B's maintenance. C, who holds a decree against B, attaches in August the allowance for September. The attachment is not valid, for the allowance can only be attached as a "debt" and the allowance for September was not a debt due to B at the time of attachment in August. Haridas v Baroda Kishore (1900) 27 Cal 38, Nilkunjo v Hurro (1878) 3 Cal 414

3 A agrees to sell his property to B for Rs. 2,000 to be paid to A on the execution of the conveyance. Hence it cannot be attached before the execution of the conveyance in execution of a decree against A. Ahmaduddin v Majlis Ras (1891) 3 All 12. But once the sale is completed, the amount representing the purchase money may be attached in the hands of B, and it does not make any difference that the whole is payable in one sum or by instalments or in the shape of periodical payments. Harshankar v Baijnath (1901) 23 All 164. C, who holds a decree against B, seeks to attach the balance of Rs. 2,000 payable by A to B as a debt due by A to B. C cannot attach the balance, for it is not a debt due by A to B. It is clear that if A fails to pay the balance, B is not entitled to specific performance, and his only remedy against A is by way of damages for non payment of the balance. Phul Chund v Chand Mal (1908) 30 All 232

Clause (a) Cooking vessels.—This clause should be liberally interpreted. Cooking vessels are not only vessels in which food is actually cooked, but also vessels necessary for cooking operations, such as a thali and a Gagra (g).

Clause (a) Ornaments.—Ornaments on the person of a Hindu wife, forming part of her stridhan, cannot be attached in execution of a decree against the husband, even though the Hindu law concedes him a personal right of user (h). The mangalsutra, a neck ornament which is worn by a Hindu married woman during the lifetime of her husband without ever removing it, is also exempted from attachment (i).

Clause (b) Implements of husbandry.—Charraks, kadhais, and planks of timber used by an agriculturist for extracting sugar juice from sugarcane which he has grown on his field and for turning it into jaggery, are implements of husbandry, within the meaning of cl (b), and are exempt from attachment (l)

Clause (c) Houses occupied by agriculturists.—The term "agriculturist" includes persons engaged in cultivating the soil for remuneration although they may have no interest in the soil either as proprietor or tenant (f). It means a small holder who tills the soil and cultivates it and not a large landed proprietor, even though his sole income is from land (m). The Code of 1882 (s. 266) exempted from attachment only the materials of houses occupied by agriculturists. But it was held that even a house occupied by an agriculturist could not be attached provided it was occupied by an agriculturist as such (n) that is to say, it was occupied by him bona fide for the purposes of agriculture (o). The burden of proving that it was so occupied lies on the agriculturist debtor, and it must be proved by him in execution proceedings (p). The exemption extends after the death of the agriculturist, to his representative occupying the house in good faith as an agriculturist (q). But if by a consent decree an agriculturist agrees in consideration of time being given to him that his house may be attached and sold on default in payment of the decretal amount, the house may be attached and sold on default (r) for the privilege is one that may be waived (s).

If a house occupied by an agriculturist is specifically mortgaged, it is not protected from sale in execution of a decree upon the mortgage. Clause (c) does not prohibit the sale of property specifically mortgaged, though it may be occupied by an agriculturist as such, unless he is prohibited by law from mortgaging or selling it (t).

Clause (e). Right to sue for damages.—"Mesne profits" are in the nature of damages, and the right to sue for mesne profits is a right to sue for "damages." Such a right cannot therefore be attached and sold in execution of a decree against the person entitled to the right. Thus if A is entitled to claim mesne profits from B for wrongful dispossession of his lands, A's right to claim mesne profits from B cannot be attached and sold in execution of a decree against A. If the right is attached and sold and purchased by X, X is not entitled to sue B for the mesne profits, the sale to him being void (u).

Clause (f) Right of personal service.—A riti is a right to receive certain emoluments as a reward for personal service, and is therefore exempt from attachment and sale (v). But a priest's share in the utpat or net balance of the offerings to a deity may be attached and sold (w). The birt Maha brahman or right to officiate as a priest at the funeral ceremonies of Hindus dying within a particular district is a right of personal service and cannot therefore be attached (x). Jatri bahis which merely contain the names

This right to offerings is a right of personal service and cannot be attached; but the right of occupancy of the sites and the wooden platforms are attachable (z) A pal or turn of worship is by custom alienable to persons within a limited circle and is attachable (a).

Clause (g): Gratuities allowed by Government.—The gratuity referred to in this section is a bonus allowed by Government to its servants in consideration of past service. It may be allowed to one who is not a "pensioner," or it may be allowed to a pensioner in addition to his pension. In either case it is exempt from attachment (b).

Stipends payable out of service family pension fund notified in the Gazette of India.—For notifications issued under this clause [i.e., cl (g)], see General Statutory Rules and Orders, vol IV, p. 685

Political pensions.—All pensions of a political nature payable directly by the Government of India are political pensions. A pension which the Government of India has given a guarantee that it will pay by a treaty obligation contracted with another sovereign power is a political pension (c) Arrears of political pension due to a pensioner and lying in the hands of Government at the time of his death do not lose their character of political pension by reason merely of the pensioner's death. The character of the fund remains unchanged so long as it remains unpaid in the hands of Government and it is not liable to attachment in the hands of Government in execution of a decree against the deceased. But once the fund has passed out of the hands of Government into the hands of the legal representative of the deceased, it may be attached like any other portion of the deceased's estate (d)

A grant of a Zamindari by Government as a reward for past services rendered by him to Government is not a pension, but a gift, and may therefore be attached in execution of a decree against the grantee. The word "pension" in this section implies periodical payment for life by Government to a pensioner.

foreign State by an arrangement with the Government of India to a deposed Maharaja (j), are instances of political pensions

Private pensions.—Private pensions, as distinguished from Government pensions, are not exempt from attachment and they may be attached either as "debts" or as "property belonging to the judgment debtor" within the meaning of this section. But they neither constitute "debts" nor "property belonging to the judgment-debtor" until they have become due and payable. Hence they cannot be attached before they have become due and payable. Pensions granted by Railway Companies to their servants are private pensions (k)

Clause (h): allowances, being less than salary, of a public officer while absent from duty.—This clause is new. The allowances (being less than salary) of a public officer [s 2 (17)] while absent from duty are now wholly exempt from attachment. Under the Code of 1852 it was held, in the absence of any specific provision as to these allowances, that they stood on the same footing as the salary of a public officer while on duty and were exempt from attachment only to the extent to which such salary was exempt, and no more [see cl (i)]. Thus where an officer was on sick leave on half pay which was Rs 150 it was held that the decree holder could attach Rs 75 (l). Under this clause the whole of Rs 150 is exempt from attachment.

Clause (i): salary of public officer while on duty.—The salary of a public officer [s 2 (17)] can be attached only partially, except when it does not exceed Rs 40 monthly in which case the whole of it is exempt from attachment. In view of this exemption it was held that a public officer could not be required to pay into Court a part of his salary as a condition precedent to his being adjudged insolvent (m). The object of the exemption appears to be to enable a public officer to maintain himself and his family in a position suitable to his rank. This exemption did not occur in the Code of 1852, hence the salary of a public officer and of the other persons mentioned in this clause was attachable to the extent of the whole as debt. And since it could only be attached as a "debt," it was not attachable until it had become due (n). Under the Codes of 1877 and 1882, and under the present Code, the salary, to the extent to which it is attachable, may be attached in advance (o). It is no valid reason for refusing the attachment that the attachment, if allowed, would not leave the officer enough to live on (p). As to the salary of Army officers, see notes below under the head "Salary of Army officers." See note above "Amendment of the section."

Salary of private servant.—The salary of a private servant can be attached as a "debt", hence it cannot be attached before it has become due (q).

Clause (j): Indian Articles of war.—The Indian Articles of War apply only to soldiers and followers of the Native Army: see Act V of 1869 as amended by Act XII of 1894. Both these Acts have been repealed by the Indian Army Act 8 of 1911, and the reference to the Indian Articles of War in this clause must be read as referring to Act 8 of 1911. The pay of soldiers and followers of the Indian Army is under that Act exempt from attachment (r).

Clause (k): compulsory deposits in Provident Funds.—The expression "compulsory deposit" is defined in s 2 (a) of the Provident Funds Act 10 of 1925 as being a subscription to, or deposit in, a Provident Fund which, under the rules of the Fund, is not, until the happening of some specified contingency, repayable on demand otherwise than for the purpose of the payment of premium in respect of a policy of life insurance, and includes, etc. By s 3 of the Act it is provided that a compulsory deposit in any Government or Railway Provident Fund shall not be liable to attachment under any decree or order of any Civil Revenue or Criminal Court in respect of any debt or liability incurred by the subscriber or depositor. A compulsory deposit cannot be attached so long as it retains the character of compulsory deposit. A deposit which when it was made, was a "compulsory deposit," continues to retain that character so long as it remains in the hands of the Railway Company. It does not lose that character though the employee may have ceased to be in the service of the Company by retirement, resignation or dismissal, and though he may have become entitled in that event to be paid the amount due to his credit in the Provident Fund. But once it is paid out by the Company on the happening of any of the above events, it loses the character of "compulsory deposit" and it may be attached in the hands of the party to whom it has been paid (s). The same principle applies to the case of an optional subscriber who cannot under the rules demand payment of his deposits at his option (t).

A sum standing to the credit of a subscriber under a Benefit Fund scheme which the Company may or may not pay in its uncontrolled discretion is not a debt which can be attached (u).

Clause (l) wages of labourers—A "labourer" is a person who earns his daily bread by personal manual labour, or in occupations which require little or no art, skill or previous education. Thus persons who agree to spin cotton and to receive a certain amount of money for a certain quantity of cotton spun by them are labourers, and their wages cannot be attached (v).

Clause (m) expectancy of succession, etc—The interest which a Hindu reversioner has in the immovable property of a deceased Hindu on the death of the deceased's widow, is "an expectancy of succession by survivorship", in other words it is an interest expectant on the widow's death to which the reversioner can only succeed if he survives the widow (w). The interest in the pre-empted property of a successful pre-emptor who has not yet paid the pre-emptive price fixed by his decree is a merely contingent interest which cannot be attached (x), see O 20, r 14. But the interest which a coparcener has in money awarded to him on partition is a vested interest although payment is deferred (y).

Clause (n) right to future maintenance—If A is entitled to a monthly maintenance allowance under an agreement, the allowance cannot be attached until after it has become due (z). It cannot be attached prospectively, that is, before it has become due (a). In other words, arrears of maintenance may be attached but not the right to future maintenance. A hereditary grant of an allowance of paddy out of the melwaram of certain land is not a right to future maintenance so as to be exempt from attachment under this section (b). Where a person holds villages under a deed which provides that he is to hold them and receive the profits in lieu of maintenance without power of transfer the interest of such person in the village is a right to future maintenance (c). But an annuity is not a 'right to future maintenance' and it may be attached and sold (d). See note to s 51. 'Receiver of future maintenance'

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed—

- (a) to exempt houses and other buildings (with the materials and the sites thereof and the lands immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment) from attachment or sale in execution of decrees for rent of any such house, building site or land, or
- (b) to affect the provisions of the Army Act or of any similar law for the time being in force

The italicized words and letters were replaced by the Repealing and Amending Act 10 of 1914, sch II

It is provided by sec 136 of the Army Act, 1881 [stat 44 and 45 Vict] amended by the Army (Annual) Act of 1893, that the pay of an officer or soldier of His Majesty's Regular Forces serving in India shall be paid to him without deduction unless the Legislature in India has directed to the contrary in that behalf. Under section 60 of the Code as it stood before the amendment above referred to, questions arose as to the extent of application of the Army Act. As regards officers in the British Army, it was held that they were officers of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of sec 136 of the Army Act, and that their salary therefore could not be attached at all (e). As regards officers in the Indian Army, there was a conflict of decisions. The High Courts of Calcutta and Madras (f) held that an officer in the Indian Army was not an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces within the meaning of sec 136 of the Army Act, and that his salary therefore was liable to be attached to the extent mentioned in s 60 (1) (i). On the other hand it was held by the High Court of Bombay (g) relying on sec 190, sub-s (8) of the said Act, that an officer in the Indian Army was an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces and that his salary therefore could not be attached at all.

Cl (b) of sub-s (2) having been repealed, the question arises whether the salary of an officer of His Majesty's Regular Forces can be attached under this section as salary of a public officer to the extent mentioned in cl (i) of sub-s (1). It has been held by the High Courts of Allahabad (h) and Bombay (i), that it can be so attached. These cases must be distinguished from a Bombay case in which the question was whether the salary of a First Class Warrant Officer could be attached under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure in execution of a decree for maintenance obtained against him by his wife. It was held that it could not be attached under the Code. The ground of the decision was that a First Class Warrant Officer was a "soldier" as defined by sec 190 of the Army Act, that under sec 143 of the Act no execution could issue against his pay in respect of the maintenance of his wife but a specified sum might be deducted for such maintenance from his pay, and that an order had already been made for such deduction by the Commander in Chief (j). Similarly sec 144 of the Army Act bars execution against the pay of a First Class Warrant Officer in respect of any decree of a Civil Court (k).

sold, and purchased by C B then applies to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground that the property was not liable to attachment and sale. Can the application be entertained? It has been held that if B was a party to the order for sale, or was aware of it and did not appeal against it he is precluded from questioning the propriety of the order after the sale, and he cannot therefore impeach the sale. A judgment debtor who might have raised objection prior to the sale but who has refrained from doing so, and who might have appealed against the order for sale, has no right after the sale has been carried out to prefer an objection that the property sold was not legally saleable (l). But if B was not aware of the proceedings in attachment of the property, or of the proceedings in connection with the sale thereof, the application to set aside the sale may be entertained even after the sale is confirmed (m). The same rule applies where a sale effected by the Collector is sought to be set aside on the ground that the property was not ancestral and therefore could not legally be sold by the Collector (n).

61. [New] The Local Government may, by general or special order published in the local official Gazette, declare that such portion of agricultural produce, or of any class of agricultural produce, as may appear to the Local Government to be necessary for the purpose of providing until the next harvest for the due cultivation of the land and for the support of the judgment-debtor and his family, shall, in the case of all agriculturists or of any class of agriculturists, be exempted from liability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree.

(3) Where a room in a dwelling-house is in the actual occupancy of a woman who, according to the customs of the country, does not appear in public, the person executing the process shall give notice to such woman that she is at liberty to withdraw, and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution, consistent with these provisions, to prevent its clandestine removal.

Changes introduced in the section.—This section corresponds with sec 271 of the Code of 1882 except that the prohibition against breaking open any outer door of a dwelling house has been relaxed where the dwelling house is in the occupancy of the judgment debtor. See note to s 53, "Breaking open of outer door"

[S. 285.] (1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, the Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached.

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to invalidate any proceeding taken by a Court executing one of such decrees.

" introduced in the section.—This section corresponds with sec 285 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

Words "is under attachment" have been substituted for the words "has been attached" See notes below, under the head "Is under attachment"

(2) is new See notes below

Explanation.—The object of this section is to prevent different attachments and sale of the same property by different Courts, and to prevent confusion in the execution of decrees (p)

of the Subordinate Judge at Surat. The Court of the Subordinate Judge is a Court of higher grade than the Small Causes Court, and it is therefore the proper Court under this section for deciding objections to the attachment, for determining claims made to the property, and for ordering the sale thereof and receiving the sale proceeds (g).

Sub section (2).—This sub section is new It declares in effect that a proceeding in execution shall not be deemed to be invalid merely because it was taken by a Court which, having regard to sub section (1), ought not to have taken it Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions on the question whether the rule contained in s. 283 of that Code [now sub sec (1)] was a rule of procedure only or whether it affected jurisdiction The High Courts of Calcutta (r), Bombay (s), and Madras (t), held that the rule was merely a rule of procedure, and did not oust the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in proceedings in execution of its own decree On the other hand, the High Court of Allahabad held that the section affected jurisdiction, that is to say, it took away the jurisdiction of the inferior Court in the several matters specified in the section (u) The result was that where a sale was effected by a Court of lower grade in a case where it ought to have been effected by a Court of higher grade, the sale, according to the Calcutta Bombay and Madras decisions, was not for that reason invalid, but according to the Allahabad decisions, it was absolutely void as one made without jurisdiction Sub section (2) gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Madras decisions (t)

There is yet another point which may be considered in the form of an illustration. A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is attached by the Subordinate Judge's Court. C obtains a decree against B in a District Court. The same property is then attached by the District Court in execution of C's decree. The property is sold by the Subordinate Judge in execution of A's decree although the proper Court to sell the property is the District Court, and it is purchased by X. Subsequently the same property is sold by the District Court in execution of C's decree, and it is purchased by Y. Which of the two purchasers has the better title? According to the decision of the Calcutta High Court in Bykant Nath v Rajendro Narain (w), X, the first purchaser would take an indefeasible title (1) if the sale was held by the Subordinate Judge's Court in ignorance of the attachment by the District Court, and (2) the purchase was made by X without notice of the attachment by the District Court, but if the sale was held by the Subordinate Judge's Court after notice of the attachment by the District Court, or the property was purchased by X with notice of that attachment, the purchase of X would be liable to be defeated by the purchase of Y. According to the decision of the Bombay High Court in Abdul Karim v Thalordas (x), it is quite enough to give an indefeasible title to Y if he purchased without notice of the attachment by the District Court. The Bombay Court does not regard any notice which the inferior Court may have of the attachment by the superior Court as of any consequence, for the simple reason that the jurisdiction of a Court cannot depend upon notice. A similar view has been taken by the Madras High Court (y). Under the present section, it seems, Y would take an indefeasible title to the property, whether or not he or the Subordinate Judge's Court had notice of the attachment by the District Court.

The result therefore is that where property is under attachment by two Courts of different grades and the property is sold by the Court of lower grade in contravention of the provisions of sub-section (1), the sale is not thereby rendered invalid, though the Court selling the property and the purchaser at the Court sale may be aware of the irregularity. The course to be adopted by the Court of higher grade in such a case is to accept the sale made by the lower Court, and to call for the proceeds of the sale and to distribute them rateably amongst all the decree holders (2). Where both the Courts are subordinate to the District Court the procedure, according to the Bombay High Court (a) is for the party interested to apply to that Court to have the sale proceeds transferred to the Court of higher grade, according to the Calcutta High Court (b), the Court of higher grade should move the District Court for that purpose. The Bombay High Court has held that it is competent to the petitioner to apply to the Court of higher grade for a transfer of the sale proceeds to that Court and that Court is competent to make the order (c). If the Court of lower grade has given the decree-holder leave to bid and set off, that is a proceeding which is saved by sub-section (2), and the assets available for rateable distribution is the balance of the purchase money after such set-off (d).

If the same property is attached by a Munsiff and by a Subordinate Judge, and is then sold by the Munsiff to A, the sale is valid. But if after the sale the decree holder in the Subordinate Judge's Court applies to that Court for sale the question arises whether X is entitled to apply to the Subordinate Judge under s. 47 to stop the sale on the ground that the title to the property has passed to him. According to the Madras High Court, he is, the reason given being that he is the "representative" of the judgment debtor within the meaning of s. 47 (e). According to the Calcutta High Court, he is not, the reason given being that he is not the "representative" of the judgment-debtor (f).

"Is under attachment."—These words have been substituted for the words "has been attached" to make it clear that the provisions of this section do not apply unless there are two or more attachments existing at the same time (g).

"Decrees of more Courts than one"—This section applies only as between Civil Courts of different grades or as between Revenue Courts of different grades. It does not apply where one decree is that of a Civil Court and another that of a Revenue Court. Hence where the same property is attached by a Civil Court and a Revenue Court, and it is sold by the Revenue Court, the purchaser is entitled to the property, and it cannot be sold in execution of the decree of the Civil Court (h).

Rateable distribution.—See notes to s. 73, "Court to which application for execution should be made."

64. [S. 276.] Where an attachment has been made, any private transfer or delivery of the property attached or of any interest therein and any payment to the judgment-debtor of any debt, dividend or other monies contrary to such attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, claims enforceable under an attachment include claims for the rateable distribution of assets.

Section 276 of the Code of 1882 was as follows :—

“When an attachment has been made by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid, any private alienation of the property attached, whether by sale, gift, mortgage or otherwise, and any payment of the debt or dividend, or a delivery of the share, to the judgment debtor during the continuance of the attachment, shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment.”

Changes introduced by the present section.—The present section differs from the corresponding s 276, C P C, 1882, in the following respects —

- (1) The words “by actual seizure or by written order duly intimated and made known in manner aforesaid” after the words “where an attachment has been made” in s 276 have been omitted as being mere surplusage (s). See notes below, “Where an attachment has been made”
- (2) The words “during the continuance of the attachment,” which occurred in s 276, have been omitted, and the words “contrary to such attachment” have been substituted for them. See notes below, “Contrary to such attachment”
- (3) The explanation to the section is new. See notes below, “Explanation to the section, etc.”

Object of the section.—A sues B for Rs 5,000. B owns a house worth Rs 5,000, and he has no other property. B may sell or mortgage the house notwithstanding the institution of the suit against him, and he may sell or mortgage it even after a decree has been passed against him in the suit, and the sale or mortgage in either case will be perfectly valid and pass a good title to the transferee (j). But if the property is attached in execution of the decree, any private transfer of the property by B contrary to such attachment shall be void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment. The object of the section is to prevent fraud on decree holders (k), and to secure intact the rights of the attaching creditor against the attached property by prohibiting private alienations pending attachments (l).

“Where an attachment has been made.”—An attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by the Code. Thus a promissory note must be attached by actual seizure as provided by O 21, r 51, and not by the issue of a prohibitory order. The mere issue of a prohibitory order does not amount to an attachment within the meaning of this section (m). Similarly in the case of immovable property, the attachment to render a subsequent alienation invalid must be made in the manner prescribed by O 21, r 51 (n). An attachment made under that rule operates as a valid prohibition against alienation from the date on which the necessary proclamation is made and a copy of the order of attachment is affixed as provided by that rule, and not from the date of the order of attachment (o). In Muthiah Chetti v Palanisappa (p) Lord Shaw said—"A fasciculus of clauses, beginning at r. 41 of Order XXI and applicable to attachment of property shows in instance after instance that attachment is a real thing, with a variety of real applications suited to the nature of the property to be attached. These instances go to show that under the Code of Civil Procedure, in India the most anxious provisions are enacted in order to prevent a mere order of a Court from effecting attachment, and plainly indicating that the attachment itself is something separate from the mere order, and is something which is to be done and effected before attachment can be declared to have been accomplished. . . . Their Lordships need not repeat in another form these propositions. The order is one thing, the attachment is another. No property can be declared to be attached unless first the order for attachment has been issued, and secondly in execution of that order the other things prescribed by the rules in the Code have been done."

Attachment before judgment.—An alienation of property made after attachment before judgment is void to the same extent as an alienation made after attachment under a decree (q). The attachment, however, must be made in the manner prescribed by the Code, and, in the case of immovable property, as prescribed by O 21, r 54 (r). The High Court of Madras has held that an alienation of property after it is attached pursuant to an order for attachment before judgment is void under this section even though the property was not actually attached until after the passing of the decree (s), but this decision is of doubtful authority. See Notes above, 'Where an attachment has been made'.

"Private transfer."—The expression "private transfer" means a voluntary sale, gift, or mortgage in contravention of the attachment, and not the enforced execution of a conveyance or assignment in obedience to a decree of a Court competent to pass it (t). The decree may be one on an award (u), even though the matters in difference were referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court (v). Releasing an easement by the dominant owner to the servient owner is a transfer within the meaning of this section (w).

Contract for sale.—The Calcutta High Court have held that a contract for sale entered into before an attachment does not create any interest or charge which can prevail over the attachment (x). In a previous case (y), Woodroffe, J., held that the contractual obligation prevailed over the attachment. Again in a Madras Case (z), the learned Judges said that it does not seem to be sound sense that when a creditor attaches property which is subject to a particular obligation, he should be able to override it.

which the execution sale is made. Therefore, a "claim enforceable under the attachment" means a claim enforceable under the attachment under which the execution sale is made (g). A claim under any other attachment is not a "claim enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The result is that—if A obtains a decree against B, and B's property is attached in execution of the decree, and

B subsequently alienates the property to C, and the property is thereafter attached and sold in execution of a decree obtained by D against B, and it is purchased by F, and C sues F for possession,

C's title is to be preferred to F's title, and C is entitled to possession of the property. D cannot object to the alienation to C, for the alienation to C was prior to his attachment. Nor is A entitled to question the alienation, for the sale in execution was not made under his alta hment, but under D's attachment. The sale having been made under D's attachment, A's claim cannot be said to be a "claim enforceable under the attachment" within the meaning of this section. The result would be the same even if we substitute A for D that is even if the decree holder in both cases was the same person. This is the effect of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mina Kumari v. Bijoy Singh (h), a case under sec 276 of the Code of 1882 which did not contain the Explanation which now occurs at the end of the present section. But the decision proceeded on the assumption that Sorahy v. Gound (i) considered in the notes below was good law, an assumption which involved the proposition now quoted in the Explanation. Mina Kumari's case therefore would also govern cases under the present section.

If in the case put above the property was sold by the Court under A's attachment instead of D's and D had applied for execution before the Court received the proceeds of the sale the alienation to C would be void, it being contrary to A's attachment, and further D would be entitled to rateable distribution under sec 73.

The attaching decree holder may agree with a purchaser of the property from the judgment-debtor pending the attachment that he will not bring the property to sale in execution of his decree. Such an agreement has the effect of rendering the alienation valid as against the attaching creditor (j).

"Contrary to such attachment."—These words have been substituted for the words, "during the continuance of the attachment," which occurred in sec 276 of the Code of 1882. The words "during the continuance of the attachment" were too wide in that they comprised alienations that could not possibly prejudice the rights of an attaching creditor, as where property is mortgaged by A to B, and the equity of redemption is subsequently attached at the instance of C in execution of a decree obtained by C against A, and pending the attachment the mortgage is transferred by B and A to D. In such a case the transfer of the mortgage, though made during the continuance of the attachment, cannot prejudice C, the attaching creditor, for the effect of the transfer is merely to substitute D for B. But the transfer having been made "during the continuance of the attachment," it came literally within the old section 276, though it was not contrary any sense be said to be contrary to the attachment (l). The words 'contrary to the attachment' have now been substituted for the words 'during the continuance of the attachment' and they give effect to the Privy Council ruling noted above. Similarly, a renewal, though pending the attachment, of a mortgage already existing on the property, is not a transfer contrary to the attachment. But if the amount secured by the renewed mortgage exceeds the amount due under the original mortgage at the date of the attachment, the additional security is to that extent void (l). If a judgment-debtor transfers property after it has been attached in execution, and the property is then sold in execution, the transfer is void as against the auction purchaser, but the transferee is a person whose interests are affected by the sale and is entitled to apply under O 21, r 90, to set aside the sale (m).

Explanation to the section. Claims for rateable distribution of assets under sec 73 are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of this section.—The Explanation to the section is new. A obtains a decree against B, and in execution of the decree attaches Rs 7,000 belonging to B in the hands of a Railway Company. B then assigns the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company to his attorneys for costs due to them subject to A's attachment. After the assignment, C, another creditor of B, obtains a decree against B, and in execution of his decree attaches the said sum in the hands of the Railway Company. Thereafter the Company pays the said sum to the Sheriff of Bombay. The assignment by B to his attorneys though made prior to C's attachment, is void as against C's claim, for C's claim is a claim for rateable distribution of assets [Rs 7,000] within the meaning of sec 73, and therefore a claim enforceable under the attachment of A by virtue of the Explanation to this section. C is therefore entitled to be paid in priority to B's attorneys. This is the law under the present Code, and it is in accordance with the view taken by the Bombay High Court in Sorabji v Gorind (n) decided under sec 276 of the Code of 1882. The view taken by the other High Courts was that C's claim, being a claim merely for rateable distribution cannot be said to be a claim enforceable under the attachment, but this view is no longer law (o). The Explanation gives effect to the Bombay decision. But the Explanation does not apply unless the claim of the subsequent decree holder can be said to be a claim for rateable distribution within the meaning of sec 73. Now the essential condition of enforcement of claims for rateable distribution under sec 73 is that there should be assets held by the Court [see sec 73 below] and that condition was satisfied in Sorabji v Gorind. But if there be no assets retained by the Court, as would be the case if no payment was made by the Railway Company to the Sheriff, and A's attachment came to an end [O 21, r 55] by B satisfying A's decree out of Court and then certifying it to the Court under O 21, r 2, C's claim cannot be enforced as a claim for rateable distribution and the assignment to the attorneys will prevail over any claim that may be made by C under his subsequent attachment (p). The Explanation to the section protects only those decree holders who are entitled to rateable distribution under sec 73, and no decree holder can be entitled to rateable distribution under that section unless there are assets held by the Court (q).

enforceable under the attachment (y) The same principle applies where the property attached, is released from attachment, and subsequently re attached by the same Court in execution of the same decree (z)

Private sale to decree holder—A obtains a decree against B In execution of the decree B's property is attached Pending the attachment B sells the property to C A then buys the same property from B Is the sale to C void under this section? No, because A bought the property not at a Court sale, but by private treaty with B The title obtained by the purchaser on a private sale of property in satisfaction of a decree differs from that acquired upon a sale in execution Under a private sale, the purchaser derives title through the vendor, and cannot acquire a title better than his Under an execution sale, the purchaser, notwithstanding that he acquires merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment-debtor, acquires that title, by operation of law, adversely to the judgment debtor, and freed from all alienations and incumbrances effected by him after the attachment of the property sold (a)

Effect of striking off execution proceedings or of removing them from the file—An attachment is not necessarily at an end because the execution case is struck off or removed from the file The effect of such a proceeding depends on the circumstances of each case Where after an attachment has been made, the proceedings in execution are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which render a fresh attachment necessary to bring the judgment debtor's property to sale, a private transfer of the property by the judgment-debtor made after the proceedings are struck off is valid, though the same property may subsequently be re-attached in execution of the same decree on a fresh application for execution But if the execution proceedings are struck off or removed from the file under circumstances which do not render a fresh attachment necessary the transfer is void as against all claims enforceable under the attachment, and the mere fact that a fresh application for attachment is subsequently made in execution of the same decree will not render the transfer valid The reason is that in the former case the proceedings in execution are deemed to have terminated on their being struck off or removed from the file, and the attachment is deemed to be at an end, and the transfer having been made after the termination of the attachment, it cannot be affected by the subsequent attachment In the latter case, however, the proceedings in execution are merely suspended, and the first attachment is therefore deemed to subsist, and the second application for attachment is a superfluity (b) Whether the execution proceedings have been struck off or removed from the file under these or those circumstances is a question of fact in each case (c) But where a fresh application for attachment is made, the presumption is that the first attachment has ceased, and the burden of proof is on the party alleging that the first attachment was still subsisting when the second application was made and that the second application was superfluous (d) B's property is attached in execution of a decree obtained against him by A The execution proceedings are then "struck off" B then sells the property to C The property is again attached on a fresh application by A Is the sale valid? There being a fresh application for attachment, the presumption is that the first attachment ceased from the moment the proceedings were struck off The sale would therefore be valid and the second attachment inoperative unless A showed that the first attachment was still subsisting at the date of transfer and that the second application was superfluous.

The above cases would not have arisen if the Courts, instead of making an order for "striking off proceedings" or "removing proceedings from the file," had made an order either dismissing the application or adjourning the proceedings where the Court was, by reason of default on the part of the decree holder, unable to proceed further with the proceedings in execution. The practice of "striking off proceedings" or "removing proceedings from the file" had no justification under any of the previous Codes. To put a stop to this practice it is now expressly provided by O 21, r. 57, that where any property has been attached in execution of a decree, but by reason of the decree holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the application for execution, it shall either dismiss the application or for any sufficient reason adjourn the proceedings to a further date, upon the dismissal of such application the attachment shall cease. Cases like the above are not likely to arise under this Code, if the procedure prescribed by O 21, r. 57, is strictly followed.

Attachment does not create a charge.—Attachment creates no charge or lien upon the attached property (e) It merely prevents and avoids private alienations, it does not confer any title on the attaching creditors (f) There is nothing in any of the provisions of the Code which in terms makes the attaching creditor a secured creditor or creates any charge or lien in his favour over the property attached (g) But an attaching creditor acquires, by virtue of the attachment, a right to have the attached property kept in custodia legis for the satisfaction of his debt, and an unlawful interference with that right constitutes an actionable wrong. Thus it is an actionable wrong if A cuts and carries away crops attached by B in execution of a decree against C, and a suit will lie at B's instance against A to recover from A damages which should not, however, exceed the value of the attached property (h)

Effect of order of adjudication on attachment.—Where a judgment debtor has been adjudicated an insolvent, the whole of his property vests in the Official Assignee. What is the effect of an order of adjudication on an attachment levied prior to the date of the adjudication order? Has the attaching creditor, by reason of his prior attachment, priority over the Official Assignee in respect of the property attached by him prior to the date of the adjudication order, or is the Official Assignee entitled to claim the attached property by virtue of the adjudication order as part of the property of the insolvent? The Courts in India had held that whether the attachment is before judgment (i), or in execution of a decree (j), the attaching creditor had no priority over the Official Assignee. These decisions were based on the ground that an attachment in India does not create any charge or lien upon the attached property.

of a debtor, no person shall be entitled to the benefit of execution against the Official Assignee or the Official Receiver except in respect of assets realised before the order of adjudication. On the other hand certain dicta of the Privy Council in the case of Anan Tapalmanabhanam v Official Receiver (l), raise a doubt as to the correctness of these decisions. In this case property in Madras had been attached in execution of a decree in 1926, but the judgment-debtor was adjudged insolvent in 1928 by a foreign Court—the District Judge of Secunderabad. The Official Receiver, Secunderabad objected to the continuance of the execution proceeding on the ground that the property had vested in him. The Madras High Court upheld the objection as the Official Receiver had priority over the attaching creditor. The Privy Council reversed this decision for the reason that the question was one of the comity of nations and not one of the municipal bankruptcy codes of either country, and that although a foreign adjudication order will be recognised as effective, it will not be allowed to interfere with any process at the instance of a creditor already pending, even though the process be incomplete. The case was one of a foreign adjudication order and their Lordships were careful to distinguish a foreign adjudication order which operates under a rule of international law from a British adjudication order which operates by force of a statute. But as to British Adjudication Orders their Lordships observed that such orders would not be affected by sec 61 as they were not private transfers. Their Lordships then proceeded to suggest that the test was whether the insolvent could have assigned the property to the trustee in bankruptcy. This seems to imply that if the judgment debtor is prevented by the attachment from alienating the property, the property will not vest in the Official Receiver or the Official Assignee. With reference to the case law as to the effect of an attachment their Lordships said “In Krishnaswamy Mudaliar v Official Assignee of Madras (m) the Court appears to have ignored the opinion expressed by this Board in Suraj Buns Koer v Sheo Proshad Singh (n) which was cited to them, and to have taken a dictum in the judgment of this Board in Moti Lal v Karab-ul din (o) from its context and used it for a purpose which it did not have in view. In Frederick Peacock v Madan Gopal (p) the case of Suraj Buns Koer was not referred to and the dictum from Moti Lal’s case was similarly employed. Their Lordships desire to reserve their opinion as to the soundness of the Madras and Calcutta decisions. The decision of this Board in Raghunath Das v Sundar Das Khetri (q) was also referred to, but that decision proceeded on an admission by counsel, the point was not argued and the case of Suraj Buns was not referred to.”

Effect of winding up order on attachment.—The position of the liquidator of a registered company differs from that of the Official Assignee in that the property of the company does not vest in him. An attachment, therefore, made on the property of the company at the instance of a decree holder before the winding up of the company cannot be released at the instance of the liquidator (r).

Corresponding section of the Code of 1882—Section 316 of the Code of 1882 ran as follows—

"When a sale of immovable property has become absolute in manner aforesaid, the Court shall grant a certificate stating the property sold and the name of the person who at the time of sale is declared to be the purchaser. Such certificate shall bear the date of the confirmation of the sale, and, as far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them, the title to the property sold shall vest in the purchaser from the date of such certificate and not before.

Provided that the decree under which the sale took place was still subsisting at that date.

The first part of section 316 now stands as O 21, r 94 with slight verbal alterations. The second part, with certain substantial alterations to be presently noted, stands as sec 65. The proviso to sec 316 has been omitted altogether.

Changes introduced in the section—Under sec 316 of the Code of 1882 the title to immovable property sold at an execution sale vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale that is the date on which the sale became absolute. Under the present section the title to such property, where the sale has become absolute vests in the purchaser from the time when the property is sold, and not from the time when the sale becomes absolute. If the sale is otherwise in order and the property is purchased by a stranger the sale must be confirmed even though the decree in execution of which the sale was held is reversed on appeal after the sale and before its confirmation (s).

The proviso to sec 316 has been omitted. It is therefore no longer necessary that the decree should be subsisting at the time of the confirmation of sale.

Vesting of property in auction purchaser—In the case of a private sale of immovable property, the property vests in the purchaser from the time when the deed of sale is executed. The reason is that a voluntary sale becomes absolute on execution and delivery of the deed by the vendor. In the case however of a Court sale, the property does not vest in the purchaser immediately on the sale thereof. The reason is that a compulsory sale does not become absolute until some time after the sale. A period of at least thirty days must expire from the date of sale before the sale can become absolute. During that period the sale is liable to be set aside at the instance of the judgment debtor on the ground of irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale, or on deposit by him in Court of the amount specified in the sale proclamation together with a percentage on the purchase money by way of compensation to the purchaser [O 21, rr 89 90]. The application by the judgment debtor to set aside the sale in either of these two cases must be made within 30 days from the date of sale. Where no such application is made the Court must make an order confirming the sale, and it is upon such confirmation that the sale becomes absolute [O 21, r 92]. After the sale has become absolute, a certificate is granted by the Court to the purchaser which is called a certificate of sale [O 21, r 94]. Such certificate bears as date the day on which the sale became absolute. It is only when the sale becomes absolute that the property sold vests in the purchaser (s). But though the property does not vest in the purchaser until the sale has become absolute, when it does vest in him it shall be deemed to have vested on the sale becoming absolute from the time when it was sold. The vesting of the property is thus made to relate back to the date of sale (u).

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of money decrees.—Under the Code of 1882, sec 316, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the certificate of sale, and not before. This gave rise to some difficulty when the question arose as to which of two successive auction purchasers should have priority in cases where the later purchaser had the certificate of sale issued to him first. Had the question been determined with exclusive reference to the terms of that section, the priority would have rested with the purchaser who first procured the certificate of sale. But this inequitable result was avoided, and the difficulty was got over by holding that the first purchaser had by his prior purchase obtained an equitable interest in the property, and that the subsequent purchaser must be deemed to have purchased the property subject to such interest (r). No such difficulty can arise under this Code, for it is provided by the present section that the property is to be deemed to have vested in the purchaser from the date of sale, and not from the date of the certificate of sale.

Illustration

In execution of a money decree obtained by A against B, certain immovable property belonging to B is sold and purchased by P1. The same property is subsequently purchased by P2 at a sale in execution of a money decree obtained by C against B. P2 obtains a certificate of sale first, and is placed in possession of the property. Subsequently P1 obtains a certificate of sale, and sues P2 for possession. Under the present section P1 is entitled to possession, for the property is to be deemed to have vested in him from the date of sale, and the sale to him was prior to the sale to P2. The same result was arrived at under the Code of 1882 by holding that P2 bought subject to P1's equitable interest and he could not therefore retain possession against P1 after P1's title was perfected by the issue of a certificate to him.

But where property is sold in execution of a decree to P1 and the sale is set aside on the ground of irregularity under O 21, r 90 and the same property is subsequently sold in execution of another decree and is purchased by P2, P2 is entitled to priority as against P1, even though the sale to P1 may subsequently be confirmed. The sale to P1 not having been confirmed until after the sale to P2, P1 is not entitled to priority over P2. Even under the Code of 1882, P1 would not be entitled to priority over P2, for the sale to him (P1) having been set aside, it could not be said that P2 purchased subject to P1's interest in the property. P1 had no interest in the property when it was sold to P2 (w).

Successive purchasers at sales in execution of mortgage decrees.—Priority between successive purchasers of the same mortgaged property in execution of mortgage decree against the same mortgagor is determined by the dates of the several purchases, and not by the dates of the several mortgages (z).

Suit for possession by auction purchaser.—It was held under the Code of 1859 that a purchaser of immovable property at a Court sale could not maintain a suit for possession thereof against a third person, unless he had a certificate of sale issued to him before suit, although the sale had become absolute. The reason given was that the transfer of property to a purchaser at a Court sale was not complete until a certificate of sale was issued to him. The decisions turned upon the language of sec 259 which provided that the "certificate shall be taken and deemed to be a valid transfer of such right, title and interest" as had passed from the judgment debtor to the purchaser. The line of reasoning adopted was that if a certificate was to be taken as a transfer the transaction must necessarily be incomplete until the certificate was issued. The said words were construed as controlling the operation of sec 256 which provided that a sale became absolute when it was confirmed by the Court (y) But it was held that as against the judgment-debtor and his representatives, the purchaser's title became complete on the confirmation of the sale (z) Under the present section, it seems, that an auction purchaser can maintain a suit for possession even against a person not a party to the suit after the sale is confirmed by the Court, though no certificate has been issued to him before the institution of the suit, provided it is produced at or before the passing of the decree The reason is that property under the present section vests in the purchaser immediately the sale is confirmed by the Court and the vesting is not postponed until the grant of a certificate In a case under the Code of 1839 where the equity of redemption of the judgment debtor was sold, it was held that the purchaser was entitled to sue the mortgagee for redemption even before the issue of the certificate, the reason given being that the suit was not one in ejectment on title, but one for redemption and therefore of an equitable nature, and the purchaser was equitably entitled to redeem The certificate in that case was produced at the hearing (a)

Mesne profits—Under the Code of 1882, the property sold vested in the purchaser from the date of the sale certificate and not before Hence it was held that the purchaser was entitled to mesne profits from the date of the certificate, and not from the date of sale (b) Under the present section the property is to be deemed to vest in the purchaser from the date of sale The purchaser, therefore, is entitled to mesne profits from the date of sale (c)

Title of auction purchaser—Under the Code of 1882, property sold in execution of a decree vested in the purchaser so far as regards the parties to the suit and persons claiming through or under them That is to say, a purchaser at a Court sale was entitled to hold the property only against the judgment debtor and his representative but not against third parties The words italicized above, which occurred in sec 316 of the Code of 1882, have been omitted in the present section The omission, however, has not the effect of enlarging the purchaser's rights, and a purchaser at a judicial sale will now as before get a good title only against persons bound by the decree, but not against strangers (d)

Sale when void and when voidable—A sale in execution of a decree is void, if the Court had no jurisdiction to sell the property Thus a Court has no jurisdiction to sell property in execution of a decree, if the notice required by O 21, r 22, is not served (e) Similarly a Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of a person who was not a party to the suit in which the property was sold or properly represented on the record (f) Again, the Court of first instance has no jurisdiction to sell property after an order is made by the appellate Court for stay of execution (g) In each of these cases the sale is a nullity, and may be disregarded without any proceeding to set it aside (h)

But where a Court has jurisdiction to sell the property, and there has been an irregularity in the course of execution proceedings, the sale is not void, but merely voidable Thus where the notice required by O 21, r 22, is served upon a person who was not in fact the legal representative of the deceased judgment debtor, but whom the Court wrongly held to be his legal representative, the sale is voidable, and not void (1). Similarly a sale is voidable and not void if there has been material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting the sale [O 21, r 90].

Irregularities of procedure in obtaining decrees or in execution proceedings— Provided that the Court has jurisdiction to sell, a purchaser at a Court sale is not bound to inquire into the correctness of the decree or of the order for sale. "To hold that a purchaser at a sale in execution is bound to inquire into such matters would throw a great impediment in the way of purchasers under executions. If the Court has jurisdiction, a purchaser is no more bound to inquire into the correctness of an order for execution than he is as to the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues" (j). "Strangers to a suit are justified in believing that the Court has done that which by the direction of the Code it ought to do" (k). Therefore, when property sold in execution of a decree under the order of a competent Court is purchased by a stranger bona fide and for value, the sale cannot be set aside on the ground that the judgment debtor had a cross decree of a higher amount and the Court therefore ought not to have directed the sale (l), or that the decree had been satisfied out of Court before the sale (m), or that the Court wrongly held that the defendant was served with the summons and on that finding passed an ex parte decree against him (n), or that though an attachment was subsisting at the date of the sale, the decree holder's application for an order of sale had been dismissed for want of prosecution before sale (o), or that the property was not liable to attachment and sale within the meaning of sec 60 (p), or that the execution of the decree was barred by limitation (q), or that the decree proceeded upon an erroneous view of the law (r), or that the decree was one which the Court ought not to have passed (s). See notes to sec 60. Objection that property not liable to attachment and sale when to be raised, on p 226 above, notes to O 21, r 22, "Consequence of omission to give notice, and Notice to wrong person, and notes to O 21, r 90. 'Material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale

The above principles apply in favour of a third party purchasing at a Court sale, they do not apply where the decree holder himself is the purchaser. The reason is that where the decree holder himself is the purchaser, he ' must be held to have had notice of all the facts relating to the suit and execution proceedings (t) Nor do they apply in favour of a party to the suit, though he may not be a decree holder (u)

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed after confirmation of sale—There is a great distinction between decree holders who come in and purchase under their own decree, which is afterwards reversed or modified, and bona fide purchasers who come in and buy at a sale in execution of the decree to which they are not parties, and at a time when that decree is a valid and subsisting decree and when the order for sale is a valid order. A bona fide purchaser, who is a stranger to the decree, does not lose his title to the property by the subsequent reversal or modification of the decree. But where the decree holder himself is the purchaser, the sale may be set aside if the decree is subsequently reversed or modified. Where the purchaser is a stranger, the judgment debtor whose property is sold is entitled only to the sale proceeds of the property if the decree is subsequently reversed. But where the purchaser is the decree holder, he is bound to restore the property to the judgment debtor (v). 'A sale in execution of a decree at which a third party becomes the purchaser is upheld notwithstanding the subsequent reversal of the decree, because otherwise there will be less inducement to intending purchasers to buy at an execution sale, and consequently less chance of property fetching proper value at such sales (w)'. See notes to sec 144, 'Who may apply for restitution'. But where property sold in execution of a decree is bought by the decree holder, and it is subsequently resold by him to a bona fide purchaser for value such purchaser acquires a good title, though the decree may be subsequently reversed (x).

Effect of reversal of decree upon sale where decree reversed before confirmation of sale—On referring to sec. 316 of the Code of 1882 (p 240) it will be observed that it contained a proviso the effect whereof was stated to be that a sale could not be confirmed if, at the time of application for confirmation, the decree under which the sale was effected had ceased to be a subsisting decree (y). That proviso has not been reproduced in the present section. Under the present section therefore a sale held in execution of a decree may be confirmed in any event where the purchaser is a third party, though the decree has been reversed before confirmation of the sale (z). See O 21 r 92 (1) and note the words, 'the Court shall make an order confirming the sale'.

it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner.

Changes introduced by the section.—

1. The words "no suit shall be maintained against any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court" have been substituted for the words "no suit shall be maintained against the certified purchaser" which occurred in the corresponding section (s 317) of the Code of 1882
2. The words "on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims" have been substituted for the words "on behalf of any other person or on behalf of some one through whom such other person claims" See notes below, "Joint purchase"
3. The latter part of sub section (2) is new See notes below under the head "Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar"

Benami purchases.—The object of the section is to put a stop to benami purchases at execution sales (a) If A under a secret understanding with B purchases property with his own money but in B's name, the purchase is said to be benami In such a case B is merely a benamidar or ostensible owner, he holds the property in trust for A and A may compel him to transfer the property to him (A) If, however, A's object in purchasing the property in B's name was to defraud his creditors and the object of the fraud is carried out, the Court will not assist A in recovering possession of the property from B, but if the object of the fraud is not carried out, the Court will assist A in recovering possession of the property from B notwithstanding A's primary intention to effect a fraud This is the law as applicable to benami purchases at a private sale (b) The law, however, is different as to benami purchases at a Court sale If A purchases property in B's name at a Court sale, and a certificate of sale is issued to B (O 21, r 94), B will be conclusively deemed to be the real purchaser as against A, and no suit will lie under this section by A against B for possession of the property, unless A can prove that B's name was inserted in the certificate fraudulently or without his consent [see sub section (2)] The same rule applies even if the claim made by the beneficial owner is not for the whole of the property of which the defendant is the certified purchaser Thus if B is the certified purchaser of certain property, part of which was purchased by him on his own account, and part benami for A A is not entitled to maintain a suit under this section for recovery of the part purchased by B benami for him (c) The mere fact, however, that the plaintiff has described the defendant as a benamidar does not make the transaction benami if it was not benami in fact, it is a mere misdescription, and it is no ground for refusing the plaintiff a relief to which he is otherwise entitled (d)

Section must be construed strictly.—Where a transaction is once made out to be benami, the Courts of India, which are bound to decide according to equity and good conscience, will deal with it in the same manner as it would be treated by an English Court of equity (e) That is to say, effect will be given to the real and not to the nominal title, unless the result of doing so would be to work a fraud upon innocent plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, on the allegation that the purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff or on behalf of some one through whom the plaintiff claims. This point is now made clear by the substitution of the word "plaintiff" for the words "any other person" in sub section (1)

Suit by a third person for a declaration that the certified purchaser is merely a benamidar—Under the corresponding s 317 of the Code of 1882, the High Court of Calcutta held that the only suits barred under that section were suits brought by the beneficial owner as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant, and that suits brought by a third party as plaintiff against the certified purchaser as defendant for a declaration that the property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, is liable to satisfy a claim of such third party against the beneficial owner, were not barred under that section (p). On the other hand, the High Courts of Madras (q) and Allahabad (r) held that even suits brought by a third person as plaintiff were barred under that section. The present section gives effect to the Calcutta decision by providing in sub section (2) that "nothing in this section shall interfere with the right of a third person to proceed against that (sic) property, though ostensibly sold to the certified purchaser, on the ground that it is liable to satisfy a claim of such third person against the real owner"

A obtains a decree against B, and attaches certain property alleged to belong to B. C objects to the attachment, alleging that he is the certified purchaser of the property, having purchased the same at a Court sale held in execution of a decree obtained against B by D. A alleges that the property was purchased by C benami for B, and sues C for a declaration that C was merely the benamidar for B. The suit is not barred under this section, for it is a suit not by the beneficial owner, but by a third person.

Suit by beneficial owner in possession for declaration of title—There is a conflict of opinion whether a suit by a beneficial owner in possession for a declaration of his right to the property against the certified purchaser is barred under this section. The High Court of Calcutta in a case under s 317 of the Code of 1882, held that such a suit was not barred under that section (s). On the other hand, the High Court of Allahabad held that such a suit was barred under that section (t). A obtains a decree against B. In execution of the decree certain property belonging to B is sold. B purchases the property in C's name. The certificate of sale is granted to C, but B continues in possession of the property. After a few years C gives notice to the tenants not to pay rent to B. B thereupon sues C for a declaration that he is the real purchaser and for an injunction restraining C from interfering with his tenants. The suit is not barred according to the Calcutta decision. It is barred according to the Allahabad decision. In the Calcutta case, the Court said "It is not a case in which the plaintiff seeks to obtain a decree for possession against the ostensible purchaser. Resting as it does, on an existing possession, we do not think that it is a suit of the nature prohibited by s 317". As to this it was observed by Strachey, C.J., in the Allahabad case cited above "If the learned Judges in that case meant to lay down that s 317 applies only where the plaintiff, being out of possession, seeks to recover possession from a certified purchaser, and can never apply to a suit by a plaintiff in possession for a declaration that the certified purchaser out of possession was not the real purchaser, I cannot agree with them". Bannerji, J., said "The first paragraph [of the section] is not confined to a suit for recovery of possession only." The correctness of the Calcutta decision was doubted by the same Court in the undermentioned cases (u), but the principle of that decision was followed by the same High Court in another case (v). It was held in the last mentioned case that where a Mahomedan father purchases property at a Court sale with his own money in the name of one of his sons, and then lets the property to a tenant and the tenant pays rent to him, this section is no bar to a suit by the other sons against the tenant and the son in whose name the property was bought for recovery of rent after their father's death. The Patna High Court holds that a suit for a declaration of title by the beneficial owner is barred, and that it is immaterial whether the plaintiff is in possession and seeks confirmation of possession or whether he is out of possession and seeks to recover possession (w).

Where the beneficial owner has been in possession for twelve years or upwards, a suit will lie at his instance against the benamidar for a declaration of his title to the property. The basis of such a suit is the plaintiff's title by possession. The suit is based, not on the ground that the defendant is a benamidar, but on the title by possession. Such a suit does not come within the purview of this section (x).

Persons claiming through beneficial owner.—This section precludes a suit by the beneficial owner or one claiming through him. It does not preclude a suit by a person who does not claim through the beneficial owner, but claims through another person (z).

Joint purchase.—The provisions of this section are designed "to create some check on the practice of making what are called benami purchases at execution sales for the

Where property is purchased at a Court sale by two or more persons jointly, the declaration that the purchase was made in his name, but with family funds, the declaration that the purchase was made of sale is in his name. The section does not apply to such a case. This was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bodh Singh v. Gunesh Chunder (a), a case under the Code of 1859. Their Lordships said: "[The provisions of the section]

When property is purchased at a Court sale by two or more persons jointly, the executing Court has no power to grant the certificate of sale to one of them only without the consent of the others. If it does so, the case is one within sub sec (2), and the other purchasers are entitled to maintain a suit against the certified purchaser for their share of the property (c).

If a joint Hindu family consists of A and his sons, and A purchases property at a Court sale with joint family funds without the concurrence of his sons in the name of a third person, are the sons entitled to recover their share of the property from the third person [certified purchaser]? The High Court of Madras (d) has held that they are, the reason given being that the purchase cannot in such a case be said to have been made by the father on behalf of the sons, and the sons are not therefore beneficial owners, and the section does not apply. On the other hand, the Allahabad High Court has held that if a managing member makes a purchase in the name of a third person, the purchase though made without the consent of his sons, must be deemed to have been made "on behalf of the sons, and the sons are precluded by this section from maintaining the suit (e)". The Allahabad High Court purports to follow the Privy Council ruling in Suraj Narain v. Ratan Lal (f), but that case, as pointed out by the Madras High Court, was a case under s 317 of the Code of 1882, which contained the words 'on behalf of any other person,' now altered into 'on behalf of the plaintiff.'

Where beneficial owner is in possession with permission of certified purchaser.—The High Court of Madras has held that if after obtaining a certificate of sale, the purchaser acknowledges that his purchase is benami, and gives up possession, or does some act which clearly indicates an intention to waive his right, or restore the property to the beneficial owner, such act may, by reason of the antecedent relation between the parties, operate as a valid transfer of the property from the purchaser to the beneficial owner. Thus if A is the manager of B's estate [and this is the antecedent relation between the parties], and the estate is sold in execution of a decree against B, and is purchased by B in A's name, a suit will lie at the instance of B against A for possession, if, after obtaining the certificate of sale, A delivers possession of the property to B, and then disturbs B in his possession. The reason given is that the permission to hold possession amounts to a transfer of title from the benamidar to the beneficial owner and the suit is thus based not on the ground that the purchase was benami but on a fresh title created by the transfer (g). The High Court of Allahabad has dissented from this view, and held, relying on the Privy Council case of Lokee v. Kallippudde (h), that the mere permission to hold possession cannot give or transfer a title from the benamidar to the real owner, and that a suit like the above would be barred under this section (i). The Calcutta High Court has followed the Allahabad decision (j). However that may be, if the certified purchaser allows the beneficial owner to take possession, the section does not enable him to sue the beneficial owner for possession, because possession has come into the hands of the person entitled to it (k).

Suit for specific performance against certified purchaser.—In Venkatappa v. Jalayya (l), a Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that this section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement to convey the property entered into after the purchase. The decision in Venkatappa's case was approved by the Judicial Committee in Ramatbaai v. Peria (m). In Ramatbaai's case it was held that the present section does not debar a plaintiff from maintaining a suit for specific performance against the certified purchaser if the plaintiff's claim is based upon an agreement made after the purchase to transfer the property to the plaintiff in pursuance of an agreement made before it. If the contract is subsequent to the purchase, such a purchase is not affected by the section (n).

Certified purchaser.—Where a purchaser, who had not obtained a certificate, was sued, and afterwards applied for and obtained a certificate, it was held that he was a certified purchaser within the meaning of this section (o).

Successor in title of certified purchaser.—This section bars a suit not only against a certified purchaser, but also against persons claiming title from him (p). Under the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to whether s. 317 of that Code was a bar to suits against persons claiming title from the certified purchaser. On the one hand the High Courts of Madras, Allahabad and Calcutta held that the expression ‘certified purchaser’ in s. 317 of that Code did not include a person claiming through or under the certified purchaser, such as an heir or an assignee (q), and that that section therefore was no bar to a suit against such person. On the other hand, the Bombay High Court held that the expression ‘certified purchaser’ included his successor in title (r). The present section contains a legislative recognition of the view taken by the High Court of Bombay (s). It is obvious that the section does not apply where the real owner seeks for a declaration of his title against a person who does not claim under a certified purchaser (t).

DELEGATION TO COLLECTOR OF POWER TO EXECUTE DECREES AGAINST IMMOVABLE PROPERTY

68. [S. 320, 1st para] The Local Government may declare, by notification in the local official Gazette, that in any local area the execution of decrees in cases in which a Court has ordered any immovable property to be sold, or the execution of any particular kind of such decrees, or the execution of decrees ordering the sale of any particular kind of, or interest in, immovable property, shall be transferred to the Collector

Power to prescribe rules for transferring to Collector execution of certain decrees

Object of the section—"The object of these provisions [i.e., provisions relating to the execution of decrees by Collectors] is well known. In different parts of India the effect of sales in execution of decrees was to transfer landed estates from the old families to modern speculators. A strong opinion was entertained by certain members of the Government of India, that these results of the administration of civil justice were impolitic and inexpedient, and it was suggested that some procedure might be devised by which the Chief Executive Officer of the district would be enabled to liquidate the debts of encumbered land holders without the immediate sale of their estates, and so to preserve the old landed gentry of the country. The provisions of secs 320 to 325C [now secs 68, 70, 71, and 72 and schedule III] were inserted in the Code of Civil Procedure, in order to give effect to these suggestions (v). See notes to O 21, r 90 Waiver and estoppel."

Notification has retrospective effect—A notification under this section transferring execution to the Collector affects procedure and therefore has retrospective effect and will apply to an execution application pending at the date of the notification (vi)

69. [New] The provisions set forth in the Third Schedule shall apply to all cases in which the execution of a decree has been transferred under the last preceding section

Provisions of Third Schedule to apply

70. [S. 320, 2nd, 3rd and 4th paras] (1) The Local Government may make rules consistent with the aforesaid provisions—

(b) conferring upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector all or any of the powers which the Court might exercise in the execution of the decree if the execution thereof had not been transferred to the Collector ;

(c) providing for orders made by the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector, or orders made on appeal with respect to such orders, being subject to appeal to, and revision by, superior revenue-authorities as nearly as may be as the orders made by the Court, or orders, made on appeal with respect to such orders would be subject to appeal to, and revision by, appellate or revisional Courts under this Code or other law for the time being in force if the decree had not been transferred to the Collector.

(2) A power conferred by rules made under sub-section

Jurisdiction of Civil Court barred

(1) upon the Collector or any gazetted subordinate of the Collector or upon any appellate or revisional authority, shall not be exercisable by the Court or by any Court in exercise of any appellate or revisional jurisdiction which it has with respect to decrees or orders of the Court.

Power of Local Government to make rules—A Local Government has power under this section to make a rule providing that no suit shall lie to set aside a sale held or confirmed by a Revenue Authority. Such a rule is not ultra vires (1c)

Civil Courts are precluded from interfering in any matter declared by notification to be within the Collector's jurisdiction—Thus if it is declared by notification that a decree for the sale of a particular kind of property, e.g., "ancestral" property, should be transferred to the Collector for execution, a sale of the property, if made, by a Civil Court, is void. Such a notification ousts the jurisdiction of the Court so far as regards the execution of the decree (1c). For the same reason, if the execution of a decree is transferred to the Collector, the Court transferring the decree has no power to postpone the sale (y), or to give leave to the decree holder to bid under O 21, r 72 (z), or to re sell the property where a re sale is necessary (a), the Collector alone has that power. Similarly where a decree is transferred for execution to the Collector, and the decree is subsequently adjusted, the application under O 21, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 258] for recording the adjustment should be made to the Collector (b). But where a decree has been sent to the Collector for execution under this section, he holds the money which may be realized in execution of such decree at the disposal of the Court which sent the decree to him for execution, and he is not competent to distribute such money, in contravention of an order of the Court indicating the mode of distribution (c)

It is to be noted that sub section (2) does not take away the jurisdiction of any Court other than the Court referred to in it. The Court there referred to is the Court mentioned in the previous portion of the section, namely, the Court to which an application was made for execution and which as such Court transmitted the decree for execution (d)

Where a suit would lie to set aside an order made by a Court executing a decree the fact that such order has been made by the Collector does not deprive the Civil Courts of the jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside such order (e)

Suit to set aside orders of Collector.—A suit will lie to set aside an order made by the Collector, if the order is ultra vires. Thus no rule has been made by the Government of Bombay under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21, r 89 [Code of 1882, s 310A] on a deposit by the judgment debtor of the amount specified in that rule, nor is there any rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90 [Code of 1882, s 311] on the ground of material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale (f). Nor has any rule been made by the Local Government of the N W P, under this section empowering the Collector to set aside a sale under O 21, r 89 [Code of 1882, s 310A] (g) though there is a rule empowering him to set aside a sale under O 21, r 90 [Code of 1882, s 311]. Again, no rule made by any of the Local Governments empowers the Collector to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud (h). The Collector again has no power to set aside a sale after it has been confirmed and the decree retransmitted to the Civil Court (i). If in any of these cases the Collector arrogates to himself the power which he has not and sets aside the sale, the order is ultra vires and it is competent to the auction purchaser to bring a regular suit in a Civil Court for a declaration that the sale was valid and that the order of the Collector setting aside the sale was invalid (j).

Suit to set aside sale held by Collector.—A suit will lie to set aside a sale held by the Collector if the sale was brought about by the fraud of the decree holder, the auction purchaser and persons who had brought pre-emption suits and who had all conspired to deprive the plaintiff of the property, for O 21, r 90 applies only to fraud in publishing and conducting a sale (k).

Appeal.—No appeal lies to the High Court from an order passed by the Collector in an execution proceeding transferred to him under this section. The reason is that this section specially provides that an appeal shall lie from the order of the Collector to such authorities as the local Government may by rules prescribe (l).

Revision.—The High Court has no power to interfere in revision with an order made by the Collector even though the order is not in accordance with the provisions of Sch III, cl I of the Code (m). An order made by the Collector in the course of execution

71. [S 320, 5th para] In executing a decree transferred to the Collector under section 68 the Collector and his subordinates shall be deemed to be acting judicially.

Collector deemed to be acting judicially

' Shall be deemed to be acting judicially —The effect of this provision is that the Collector and his subordinates are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act XVIII of 1850, which are as follows —

No Judge, Magistrate Justice of the Peace Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction provided that he at the time, in good faith believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of and no officer of any Court or other person, bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute, if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same

But though the Collector is deemed to be acting judicially, he is not a Court (n1)

72. [S 326] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share

Where Court may authorize Collector to stay public sale of land

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable

The Court may authorize the Collector —These words are not imperative, but leave a discretion to the Civil Court That discretion can only be exercised upon materials placed before the Court It is therefore open to the decree holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court, and to satisfy the Court as well by evidence as by argument that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable The Court should not decline to receive the evidence offered by the decree holder (o)

Temporary alienation.—This section admits only of a temporary alienation of land, and not an arrangement by which possession is to be left with the judgment-debtor subject to payment of the judgment-debt by instalments (p)

A temporary alienation of land belonging to a judgment debtor who is a member of an agricultural tribe does not come within the purview of s 16 of the Punjab Alienation of Land Act 13 of 1900 which prohibits a sale out and out (q)

Provisions of sections 69 to 71 to apply.—Reading this section with para 2 of schedule III [Code of 1882 s 322] referred to in s 69, it is clear that the provisions of this section cannot be applied to a decree which directs the sale of land in pursuance of a contract specifically affecting the same (r) Similarly reading this section with para 11, sub para (1) of schedule III [Code of 1882, s 352A] it follows that where a judgment-debtor executes a mortgage of his property, while the property is in the management of a Collector under this section, with an undertaking to put the mortgagee in possession, the mortgagee is not entitled to claim possession (s) Likewise, reading this section with the same paragraph, no Court can issue any process of execution against any immovable property in the management of a Collector under this section Therefore, the period during which the property is in the management of the Collector under this section should be excluded from the period of limitation applicable to the decree of which execution is refused by the Court by reason of the property having been in the Collector's management (t). see sch III, para 11, sub para (3)

DISTRIBUTION OF ASSETS

73. [S. 295.] (1) Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court for the execution of decrees for the payment of money passed against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, the assets, after deducting the costs of realization, shall be rateably distributed among all such persons

Provided as follows —

- (a) where any property is sold subject to a mortgage or charge, the mortgagee or incumbrancer shall not be entitled to share in any surplus arising from such sale ;
- (b) where any property liable to be sold in execution of a decree is subject to a mortgage or charge the Court may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold

71. [S. 320, 5th para.] In executing a decree transferred to the Collector under section 68 the Collector and his subordinates shall be deemed to be acting judicially.

Collector deemed to be acting judicially

"Shall be deemed to be acting judicially."—The effect of this provision is that the Collector and his subordinates are entitled to the benefit of the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act XXIII of 1850, which are as follows —

'No Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court for any act done or ordered to be done by him in the discharge of his judicial duty, whether or not within the limits of his jurisdiction provided that he at the time, in good faith, believed himself to have jurisdiction to do or order the act complained of and no officer of any Court or other person, bound to execute the lawful warrants or orders of any such Judge, Magistrate, Justice of the Peace, Collector or other person acting judicially shall be liable to be sued in any Civil Court, for the execution of any warrant or order, which he would be bound to execute, if within the jurisdiction of the person issuing the same

But though the Collector is deemed to be acting judicially, he is not a Court (n1).

72. [S. 326.] (1) Where in any local area in which no declaration under section 68 is in force the property attached consists of land or of a share in land, and the Collector represents to the Court that the public sale of the land or share is objectionable and that satisfaction of the decree may be made within a reasonable period by a temporary alienation of the land or share, the Court may authorize the Collector to provide for such satisfaction in the manner recommended by him instead of proceeding to a sale of the land or share.

Where Court may authorize Collector to stay public sale of land

(2) In every such case the provisions of sections 69 to 71 and of any rules made in pursuance thereof shall apply so far as they are applicable.

"The Court may authorize the Collector."—These words are not imperative, but leave a discretion to the Civil Court. That discretion can only be exercised upon materials placed before the Court. It is therefore open to the decree holder to place those materials in the shape of evidence before the Civil Court, and to satisfy the Court as well by evidence as by argument that the proposal of the Collector is not feasible or practicable. The Court should not decline to receive the evidence offered by the decree holder (o) free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold ;

- (c) where any immovable property is sold in execution of a decree ordering its sale for the discharge of an incumbrance thereon, the proceeds of sale shall be applied—first, in defraying the expenses of the sale ;

secondly, in discharging the amount due under the decree ;

thirdly, in discharging the interest and principal monies due on subsequent incumbrances (if any) ; and,

fourthly, rateably among the holders of decrees for the payment of money against the judgment-debtor, who have, prior to the sale of the property, applied to the Court which passed the decree ordering such sale for execution of such decrees, and have not obtained satisfaction thereof.

(2) Where all or any of the assets liable to be rateably distributed under this section are paid to a person not entitled to receive the same, any person so entitled may sue such person to compel him to refund the assets

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government.

Changes introduced by the section.—The present section differs from the corresponding s. 295, C. P. C., 1882, in the following respects :—

1. The words, "where assets are held by a Court," have been substituted for the words, "whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" This, it is submitted, introduces an important alteration, though the High Court of Bombay has held otherwise See notes, "Assets held by Court," on p. 260 below.
2. The words, "before the receipts of such assets," have been substituted for the words, "prior to the realization." See notes, "Before the receipt of the assets," on p. 258 below.
3. The word, "passed," has been added after the word, "money." See notes, "Same judgment-debtor," on p. 267 below.
4. The words, "interest in," in cl. (b) have been substituted for the words, "right against," to bring the wording of that clause into line with the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, s. 96. This is a mere verbal alteration

Rateable distribution.—The object of this section is to provide a cheap and expeditious remedy for the execution of money-decrees held against the same judgment-debtor by adjusting the claims of rival decree holders without the necessity for separate proceedings (u). Under the Code of 1859 (s. 270), the creditor who first attached property has a prior claim to have his decree satisfied out of the sale proceeds to the exclusion of other creditors, but now all judgment creditors who apply to the Court, prior to the receipt of the sale proceeds by the Court, are entitled to share rateably (t). In Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (w), Strachey, C.J., said. "The object of the section is two fold. The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate, in a case where there are many decree holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property, the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree holders in the position I have described upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property." A obtains a decree against B in Court X for Rs. 4,000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of certain property belonging to B, and the property is thereupon attached. C then obtains a decree also against B in Court X for Rs. 2,000, and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property attached in execution of A's decree. The property is then sold by the Court in execution of A's decree for Rs. 3,000. C is entitled to share rateably in the net sale proceeds, that is to say, if the net sale proceeds amount to Rs. 3,000, A will be paid Rs. 2,000 and C will be paid Rs. 1,000. It is not necessary to entitle C to participate in the assets that he should have given notice to A of the application made by him for execution of his decree (x).

Conditions for rateable distribution.—To entitle a decree holder to participate in the assets of a judgment debtor, the following conditions must be present—

1. The decree holder claiming to share in the rateable distribution should have applied for execution of his decree to the Court by which the assets are held.
2. Such application should have been made prior to the receipt of the assets by the Court.
3. The assets of which a rateable distribution is claimed must be assets held by the Court.
4. The attaching creditor as well as the decree holder claiming to participate in the assets should be holders of decrees for the payment of money.
5. Such decrees should have been obtained against the same judgment debtor.

No rateable distribution can be claimed under the section unless all the conditions enumerated above are fulfilled. We proceed to examine those conditions.

Application for execution.—The application for execution must be in the form prescribed by O 21, r 11 (y). An application in this form was held to be sufficient, although the applicant did not ask for attachment or sale of the property, but only for rateable distribution of the assets to be realised at the execution sale of another decree holder (z). It has, however, been held that an application which does not contain all the particulars required by O 21, r 11, may yet be sufficient for the purposes of the section (a).

Court to which application for execution should be made.—Those decree holders alone are entitled to rateable distribution who have applied for execution of their decrees as provided by O 21, r 11 [Code of 1882, s 235] to the Court by which the assets are held (b). An application to the Court which passed the decree to issue a precept of attachment under s 46, to the Court by which the assets are held is not sufficient (c). Nor is an application to a Court in anticipation that the decree will be transferred to it for execution (d).

The point to be considered under this head is whether where property of the same judgment debtor is attached in execution of decrees of more Courts than one, and the property is sold by the Court of the highest grade, the holders of decrees of inferior Courts are bound, in order that they may be entitled to rateable distribution, to have their decrees transferred to the Court of the highest grade and make a fresh application for execution to that Court. A obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the First Class. In execution of the decree B's property is attached by that Court. C then obtains a decree against B in the Court of a Subordinate Judge of the Second Class and applies to that Court for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of the same property. The property is then sold by the First Class Subordinate Judge in execution of his decree, and the sale proceeds are received by that Court. Here the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court by which the assets are held. Is C entitled to rateable distribution? No, according to the High Court of Bombay, he not having applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class for execution of the decree that being the Court by which the assets are held (e). Yes, according to the Calcutta (f), Allahabad (f1), Rangoon (g) and Madras High Courts (h) the reason given being that under s 63 the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the First Class is the Court to determine all claims relating to the attached property, and such claims include claims for rateable distribution.

2 Before the receipt of the assets—The application for execution must be made before the receipt of the assets by the Court. The corresponding s 295 of the Code of 1882 commenced as follows—

‘Whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree, and more persons than one have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court by which such assets are held’

The present section begins as follows—

Where assets are held by a Court and more persons than one have, before the receipt of such assets, made application to the Court

The word realization was rather obscure. Indeed it called for several decisions in which the Courts had to define its precise meaning. The word “receipt” which is now substituted for “realization” is not likely to require any judicial interpretation. Cases of the character noted below which turned upon the word “realization” are not likely to arise under the present section, so clear is the meaning of the word “receipt”

A, B and C held each a money decree against the same judgment debtor. In December 1892, A attached by a prohibitory order funds of the judgment debtor in the hands of D [O 21, r 46, Code of 1882, s 268]. In January 1893, B attached the same funds in execution of his decree. In February 1893, D paid the funds into Court. On the same day, but after payment was made into Court, C applied to attach the fund as property in the custody of the Court [O 21, r 52, Code of 1882, s 272]. It was held under s 295 of the Code of 1892 that the funds should be rateably distributed between A and B, and that C was not entitled to participate therein, as his application was made subsequent to the realization of the assets by the Court (i). The decision would be the same under the present section, for it is quite clear that C's application was made after the receipt of the assets by the Court.

It was held under s 295 of the Code of 1882 that where property is sold in execution of a decree, the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized not when the 25 per cent is deposited by the purchaser into Court under s 306 [now O 21, r 84], but when the balance of the purchase money is paid (j). Hence a decree holder who applied for execution before the entire amount due from the purchaser had been paid into Court was held entitled to share in the rateable distribution though the application was made after deposit of the 25 per cent. But it was held that a decree holder who applied for execution after the entire amount of the purchase money had been paid into Court was not entitled to share in the rateable distribution though his application was made before the sale was confirmed by the Court under s 312 [now O 21, r 92], and the decision was put on the ground that the point of time when assets are realized is when the sale-proceeds are paid into Court, and not when the sale becomes absolute (k). The result is the same under the present section as will be seen by substituting the word "received" for the word "realized" (l).

The High Court of Madras has held that where immovable property is sold in execution of a decree in separate parcels, the sale proceeds are not deemed to be realized until the entire amount of the purchase money in respect of all the parcels is paid into Court (m). This decision was followed by the Calcutta High Court (n), but in a later case that Court held that where immovable property is sold in separate parcels, the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Court (o). As regards movables the Lahore Court had held that if the property consists exclusively of movables, and they are sold in separate lots on different dates, the sale proceeds are deemed to be realized on the several dates on which they are received by the Officer of the Court and not on the date on which the last payment is received. Thus if some of the movables are sold and the price thereof is received on January 5 and the rest are sold and the price thereof is received on January 10, a decree holder who applies for rateable distribution on January 7 is entitled to rateable distribution of the sale proceeds realized on January 10, but not of those realized on January 5 (p).

Where property is sold in execution by a person appointed by the Court under O 21, r 65, the receipt of purchase money by such person is for the purposes of this section equivalent to receipt of assets by the Court. The material date, therefore, is not the date on which the Court receives the amount of the purchase money from such person, but the date on which such person receives the purchase money from the purchaser (q).

When property which is attached in execution of decrees of several Courts, is sold by a Court of inferior grade and the sale proceeds are transferred to the Court of highest grade for rateable distribution, the date of receipt of assets is the date when the sale proceeds are received by the latter Court (r).

If Court A attaches the proceeds of a sale held by the Collector and directs the Collector to send the sale proceeds to itself and the Collector sends the proceeds not to Court A but to Court B there is no constructive receipt of assets by Court A (s).

When a decree holder is given leave to bid and set off at a Court sale, there is a receipt of assets when the sale takes place (s). In such a case the decree holder purchaser must share the proceeds of the sale rateably with the competing decree holders (t), and the Court ordering rateable distribution may make an order for the refund of the proportionate amount to be enforced by summary process in execution (u).

Sale by Collector—Where the sale is held by the Collector, the application for execution must be made before the sale proceeds are received by him, though he may send the sale proceeds to the Court under Sch. III, cl. 9, at a later date (v).

Sale in execution of mortgage decree—In the case of a sale in execution of a mortgage decree the words "prior to the sale" in clause (c) shew that the receipt of assets is the date of the sale and not the date when the money is actually received (w).

3 Assets held by a Court—Far more important than the change effected by the word "receipt" is the change introduced by the omission of the words "whenever assets are realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree" and the substitution thereof of the words "where assets are held by a Court". The Code contemplates the Court receiving certain assets and then proceeding to hold them. Money paid by a garnishee to the sheriff are assets received and held by the Court although the judgment debtor obtains a stay order directing the money to remain in the sheriff's hands (x). The words "held by the Court" coupled with the word "realization" which occurs later on in the section include it is submitted several kinds of assets which were held not liable to rateable distribution under s. 293 of the Code of 1882.

Assets available for rateable distribution—The only kinds of assets that were held to be available for rateable distribution under s. 293 were —

(a) assets realized by "sale in execution of a decree," that is, sale proceeds of property sold in execution of a decree (y), and

(b) assets realized "otherwise in execution of a decree." These words were held to mean assets realized from the property of the judgment debtor by such modes as those prescribed by s. 291 [O. 21 r. 69] s. 305 [O. 21, r. 83] and s. 322 [Sch. III paras. 2 and 7] (z). This was explained in later decisions as meaning assets realized in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code (a). The following were held to be assets of this class —

(i) debts attached under s. 268 [now O. 21, r. 46] and paid into Court by the garnishee (l)

(ii) rents of property under attachment realized by a receiver appointed under s. 503 [now s. 51, cl. (d)] at the instance of the decree holder (c) [The appointment of a receiver by the Court in such a case is a "process of execution"],

(iii) money in the custody of a public officer attached under s. 272 [now O. 21, r. 52] and paid into Court by that officer (d),

Assets not available for rateable distribution—Assets not realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree were not liable to rateable distribution under s 295. The following are instances of assets held not to be realized by sale or otherwise in execution of a decree within the meaning of s 295, and therefore not subject to rateable distribution under that section —

Cases under s 295 of the Code of 1882.

A—Purshotamdass v Surajbharthi (1882) 6 Bom 588—Money paid by a judgment debtor under arrest under s 236 of the old Code [now s 55, proviso 4] to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release were held to be assets not subject to rateable distribution. Sir Charles Sargent, C.J., said “Section 295 . . . must . . . be read as if the words ‘from the property of the judgment debtor’ were inserted after the word realized. The provisions contained in sections 291 [O XXI r 83], 303 [O XXI, r 69] and 322 [now Sch III paras 2 and 7 the latter para corresponding with s 323 of the old Code] are all modes of realizing assets from such property otherwise, than by sale, and are sufficient to account for the introduction of that expression into section 295. The effect of the above decision is that to constitute a realization with the meaning of s 295 it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code.”

The correctness of the reasoning in Purshotamdass case seems to have been doubted in Manilal v Nanabhai (i) where Sir Lawrence Jenkins (J.), said Prima facie the word realized implies that property has been converted into or obtained in cash or some other form available for immediate distribution and there is nothing in the word itself which requires that that process should take place as the result of any ulterior proceeding in the course of execution. But it was the leading case under the old section, and it was followed in cases B, C, D and E below.

B—Gopal Des v Chunni (1886) 8 All 67 following case A—Money paid into Court by the judgment debtor under s 275 of the old Code (now O XXI, r 55 (a)) for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached was held to be an asset not available for rateable distribution the reason given being that the money was not realized from the property of the judgment-debtor.

C—Sew Bux v. Shib Chunder (1886) 13 Cal 225 following case A—A obtained a decree for money against B. B's property was attached in execution of the decree. C then obtained a decree for money against B, and applied for attachment of B's said property, a warrant of attachment was issued, but the property was not actually attached. B then filed his petition in insolvency, and a vesting order was made. The Official Assignee then paid into Court the amount of A's decree, and the property was released from attachment. C then applied for rateable distribution under s 295 of the amount paid into Court. Held that C was not entitled to rateable distribution. Trevelyan, J., said: "I do not think that in this case the money was realized out of the property of the judgment debtor." "I think that, by 'sale or otherwise' means by sale or by other process of execution provided for in the Civil Procedure Code."

D—Prosonnomoys v. Sreenauth (1894) 21 Cal 809—In this case Sale, J., said that the rule deducible from cases A and C was that "to constitute a realization within the meaning of section 29, it must be either a realization by a sale in execution under the process of the Court, or it must be a realization in one of the other modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code."

E—Ishudajriya v. Yusuf (1905) 28 Mad 380 following cases A, B, C and D—Moneys realized by a judgment debtor by a private sale of his property attached in execution of a decree against him and paid by him into Court under s 275 of the old Code [now O XXI, r 55 (a)] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached were held to be assets not available for rateable distribution, the reason given being that though there was a realization of assets the realization was not in one of the modes expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code.

Note—The only distinction between cases B and E is that in case E the judgment debtor obtained the money by sale of the attached property, while in case B he obtained it without any sale.

It is submitted that the assets in cases A, B, C and E should under the present section be treated as assets available for rateable distribution. The test under the present section is—

- (1) whether the moneys of which rateable distribution is claimed are assets held by the Court, and
- (2) whether they have been realized or obtained in execution. The scope of the new section is wider than that of the old one (j). See below, notes under case F.

Cases under the present section

In the following cases which were all decided under the present section it was held that the moneys held by the Court were not assets available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the section.—

F—Sorabji v. Kala (1911) 36 Bom 156 12 IC 911—Money paid into Court by a judgment debtor under O XXI, r 55 (a) [Code of 1882, s 275] for payment of the amount due to the decree holder at whose instance the property was attached has been held not subject to rateable distribution under this section. (This is the same as case B above.) Sir Basil Scott C.J., said: "In the reference to the costs of realization, we have an indication that the legislature contemplated that the assets referred to should be assets held in the process of execution. If we were to hold that money paid into Court under Order XXI, rule 55, was assets held by the Court within the meaning of section 73, we should be only nullifying the provisions of Rule 55, for, there would be no inducement to any judgment debtor to procure a payment into Court of the amount of the claim of his attaching creditor if the money could at once be absorbed by rateable distribution amongst a number of other creditors." This assumes that the word 'realized' means realized by sale or other process of execution expressly prescribed by the sections of the Code as was held in cases A, C, D and E. It is submitted, with respect, that the words "sale or otherwise" which occurred in s 293 of the Code of 1882 having been omitted in the present section, the interpretation put upon those words in cases A, C, D and E can no longer govern cases arising under the present Code. All that is necessary under the present Code is that (1) there should be assets held by the Court, and (2) that such assets should have been realized or obtained in execution proceedings [see the observations of Sir Lawrence Jenkins cited in case A above]. It cannot possibly be said that moneys paid into Court by a judgment debtor under stress of execution under O 21, r 55 (a), are not assets obtained in execution proceedings. It is indeed difficult to see how this view of the section nullifies the provisions of O 21, r 55, for money paid into Court under r 55 may be held to be assets subject to rateable distribution, and yet full effect may be given to r 55. There is no reason why because a particular payment may operate to release the person [see case G] or property of a judgment debtor from attachment, that payment should be applied for the benefit exclusively of the decree holder at whose instance the person or property of the judgment debtor was attached. Moreover, the object of O 21, r 55 is not to afford any inducement to a judgment-debtor as supposed by the Court in Sorabji v Kala. All that O 21, r 55, says is that the circumstances mentioned in cls (a), (b) and (c) of that rule shall have the effect indicated in the rule. As to the argument based on the costs of realization, it cannot possibly be said that no costs were incurred in obtaining the moneys from the judgment debtor. The decision in Sorabji v Kala has been disapproved by the High Court of Madras (k). It has also been disapproved by Pratt, J, in a later Bombay case—Nathmal v Maniram (l). As to the first of the two grounds on which the decision in Sorabji v Kala was based, namely, that the money was not realized in process of execution, Pratt, J, said that it followed the cases decided on the words 'sale or otherwise,' which were held to mean sale or other process of execution expressly provided for in the Code, but that it was too restrictive a construction under the amended section (m). As to the second ground, namely, that to allow rateable distribution of money paid into Court under O 21, r 55, would be to nullify the provisions of r 55, the learned Judge said: "I also venture to doubt the correctness of the second reason. Order XXI, rule 55, operates effectively where there is one decree holder. If there are a number of decree holders, there is no scope for the rule for the judgment debtor has no motive for paying off one judgment creditor when the same property is liable to be re-attached by the others. To allow one decree holder to be paid off in full when the

of section 73 that other creditors could claim to share. Nor could they under O 21, r 52, where funds in Court are themselves the subject matter of the execution.'

G—Edg Umersey v W & A Griham & Co (1917) 19 Bom L R 274, 39 I C 623—Money paid by a judgment debtor under arrest under section 55, proviso 4, to the officer arresting him in order to secure his release is not an asset subject to rateable distribution. [This case is the same as case A.] Macleod J⁶, said: 'It appears that the section was only intended to apply to assets realised by the sale of property attached. This view of the section it is submitted is not correct. If this view were correct, money paid to stop a sale under O 21, r 69, and money raised by private alienation under O 21, r 83 would not be assets subject to rateable distribution. But even under the old section it was assumed by Sir Charles Sargent in case A that such monies were available for rateable distribution. It cannot possibly be said that the present section is more restricted in its scope than the old section. See also the observations of Rankin, J., in Noor Mahomed's case cited in case F above.'

H—Nathmal v Maniram (1919) 21 Bom L R 975, 53 I C 599—A obtained a decree for money against B and in execution of the decree took out a warrant for attachment of the movable property of B under O 21, r 43. The bailiff entered B's shop and showed the warrant to B and pointed out that if the money were not paid he would seize and keep in his custody the movable property in his shop. B then paid the decretal amount and costs of execution and sheriff's poundage. Upon these facts Pratt J expressed the opinion that the money having been paid under stress of the warrant (1) and the warrant being a process of execution the money was an asset available for rateable distribution within the meaning of the present section. The learned Judge, however, felt bound by the decision of the Appellate Court in Sorabji v Kala [case F], and held that the money was not subject to rateable distribution.

I—Ghisulal v Todarmull (1921) 26 C W N 169, 70 I C 539 (22) A C 19—In a money suit by A against B B's property was attached before judgment and then released on C standing security for the amount of the claim. The suit was ultimately decreed and A applied for execution whereupon C deposited the amount of the decree in Court. On that very day just before the deposit was made D another decree holder applied for execution of his decree. It was held that the monies deposited by the surety were assets held by the Court within the meaning of this section, and D was entitled to rateable distribution.

4 Decrees for the payment of money.—It is only holders of decrees for the payment of money that are entitled to a rateable distribution under this section. What is a decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section? We proceed to note the decisions—

- (i) A decree for the payment of mesne profits is a "decree for the payment of money within the meaning of this section, notwithstanding that the amount of mesne profits has not yet been ascertained. The holder of such a decree, who has applied for attachment under O 21, r 42 [Code of 1882, s 255] is entitled to a rateable distribution with other decree-holders under this section (t)
- (u) A decree upon a mortgage, which enables the mortgagee to realize the amount of the mortgage-debt 'from the mortgaged properties and from the defendants personally' was held to be a 'decree for the payment of money within the meaning of the old section by the High Court of Calcutta in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mukherji (w). In that case the Court said 'Every decree by virtue of which money is payable, is to that extent a decree for money within the meaning of the section, even though other relief may be granted by the decree [e.g., sale of mortgaged property], and the holder of such a decree is entitled to claim rateable distribution with holders of decrees for money only (x). Following these observations, the High Court of Madras held that where a decree upon a mortgage directs the mortgagor to pay the mortgage-debt to the mortgagee within the period fixed by the Court, and provides that in default the mortgaged property should be sold, and the balance if any should be recovered from the mortgagor, the decree was one 'for the payment of money' within the meaning of the old section (y). In subsequent cases, however which turned upon the meaning of the expression 'decree for the payment of money' which occurred in sec 230 of the Code of 1882 [now s 48] the High Court of Calcutta dissented from the Madras decision on the ground that the decree in that case was not similar to the decree in Hart v Tara Prasanna Mukherji, the decree in the latter case containing a distinct order upon the mortgagor personally to pay the amount of the mortgage debt (z). The decree in those cases was similar to the decree in the Madras case, and it was held that the decree was not a 'decree for the payment of money' within the meaning of sec 230 of the Code of 1882. The decision, it seems, would have been the same if the Court had been called upon to interpret the same expression in sec. 230 of the Code of 1882, and the observations in Hart's case set out above would have been regarded as mere obiter dicta. The Allahabad decisions bearing on the expression 'decree for the payment of money' in sec 230 of the Code of 1882, are also to the same effect (a). There is little doubt that if these High Courts were called upon to decide whether a decree of the character

the expression 'decree for the payment of money' now s 48] and approved in Said nadassamy Ayyar v Somasundaram Pillai (1905) 28 Mad 473 [a case under s 258 of the Code of 1882, now O 21 r 2] in the Madras case was a "decree for the payment of money" within the meaning of this section, they would hold that it was not. In any event the Madras decision cannot be sustained under this Code see O 21, r 20

- (iii) A decree directing the payment under sec 90 of the Transfer of Property Act [now O 34, r 6] of the balance of the mortgage debt remaining due after payment to the mortgagee of the nett proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged property is a 'decree for the payment of money' within the meaning of this section (b)
- (iv) A decree directing the payment of money by a person does not cease to be a decree for the payment of money so far as that person is concerned, merely because it directs, as against another person, the realization of the money claim from mortgaged property. Thus a decree against A, B and C, which, so far as A and B are concerned, is a decree for the enforcement of a mortgage by sale of their property, but which does not direct the sale of any specific property belonging to C, is as regards C, a decree for the payment of money (c)
- (v) A judgment entered up under sec 86 of the Insolvent Debtors Act is a money decree (d)

5. Same judgment debtor.—The provisions of this section do not apply unless the judgment debtor is the same. Where the holder of a decree against two or more persons applies for a rateable distribution of the assets realized from property belonging to one of such persons, the application is one for the execution of the decree against the same judgment debtor.

Illustration

A obtains a decree against A, and attaches A's property in execution of the decree. Y, who holds a decree against A and B, applies for execution of his decree by attachment and sale of A's property attached in execution of A's decree. Y is entitled under this section to share in the proceeds of the sale of A's property. It is immaterial that Y's decree is against B also and that the decree might have been separately executed against B. Shumbhoo Nath v Luckynath (1883) 9 Cal 920, Grant v Subramanian (1899) 22 Mad 241, Delhi and London Bank v Uncovenanted Service Bank (1888) 10 All 35.

Similarly, where the holder of a decree against one person applies for a rateable distribution of the assets of that person realized from property belonging to that person and another such application is an application for the execution of a decree against the same judgment debtor.

Illustration

A obtains a decree against A, B and C, and attaches in execution of the decree certain property belonging to A, B and C jointly. D holds a decree against A alone. D is entitled under the provisions of this section to a proportionate distribution of the assets realized by the sale of the joint property so far as they represent the share of A in that property. Similarly, if D held a decree against A and B, he would be entitled to a rateable distribution of the assets so far as they represented the share of A and B in the property. Ginesh v Shira (1903) 30 Cal 583, Gatti Lal v Bar Lalalal (1904) 27 All 158, Pamanathan v Subramanian (1903) 26 Mad 179, Chhotulal v Vaidikhan (1904) 29 Bom 528. Rights of Government not affected—A judgment debt due to the Crown is entitled to precedence in execution (r)

Attorneys lien—The section does not apply to a solicitor's common law lien for costs. That lien is not affected by the attachment of the decree (w)

Rights created by this section not affected by insolvency—An order made under this section for rateable distribution is not affected by the insolvency of the judgment debtor subsequent to the making of the order. But the order will be confined in its operation to the assets of the judgment debtor realized up to the date of the order of adjudication, assets realized after the date of the order of adjudication will vest in the Official Assignee (x)

Appeal—An order made under this section is not appealable unless all the conditions enumerated in s 47 are present (y). One of those conditions is that the question decided by the Court should be one which arose between the parties to the suit, that is, between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holder on the other (z). Hence an order made under this section determining a question between two rival decree holders in which the judgment debtor had no interest does not fall within s 47 and no second appeal lies from such order (a). But if the question determined by the order arose not only between rival decree holders, but also between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holders on the other, the order would be within s 47, and would therefore be appealable (b).

Revision—As to revision see the undermentioned cases (c)

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION.

74. [S. 330] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or that the purchaser of immovable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree-holder or purchaser, order the judgment-debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree-holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property.

Decree against legal representative of judgment debtor—The High Courts of Bombay, Madras and Calcutta have held that if a decree is obtained by X against B, and by Y after B's death against B's legal representative, the judgment debtor is not the same and the present section does not apply (e). There is a dictum in a Calcutta case (f), that a decree against a defendant personally and a decree against the same defendant in a representative character are not decrees against the same person, but the observation was not intended as a considered decision (g).

Clauses (a), (b) and (c)—The first paragraph of this section and clauses (a) and (b) have reference to sales in execution of simple money decrees. Clause (a) declares the incompetence of a mortgagee or incumbrancer as such to share in any surplus proceeds when property is sold subject to his mortgage or charge. But the alternative is afforded to him by clause (b) of consenting to the property being sold free of his mortgage or charge, in which case the Court may give him the same right against the sale proceeds as he had against the property. Clause (c) has reference to a sale in execution enforcing an incumbrance, but in distributing the sale proceeds the discharge of subsequent (and not prior) incumbrances is alone taken into account (h), but no payment can be made to a subsequent incumbrancer if the mortgagor challenges its existence or validity (i). In cases coming under clause (c) the application for execution must be made prior to the sale of the property (j). Compare O 34, r 13.

A curious use was sought to be made of clause (b) in the following case. B mortgaged property to A. A sued to enforce the mortgage, but the Court holding that B had no title to the property granted A a simple money decree. A filed an application to execute the money decree. During execution proceedings B became entitled to the property by succession. A believed that under sec 43 of the Transfer of Property Act the mortgage had become effective. He therefore withdrew his application and filed another application for execution by way of realization of his supposed charge under sec 43. This was of course disallowed as the decree was a simple money decree. He then sought to treat his application as an application for attachment and sale of the property reserving a charge on the sale proceeds under sec 73 (1) (b). Thus the Court disallowed as it was diverting the execution proceeding into an enforcement, not of a money decree but of a mortgage decree (l). The Court did not decide whether sec 43 was at all applicable, and it may be noted that sec 43 does not apply after the contract of transfer has merged in a decree.

Claims for rateable distribution of assets—These claims are claims enforceable under an attachment within the meaning of sec 64. See notes to sec 64, "Explanation to the section."

Attachment before judgment—A decree holder who has caused property to be attached before judgment, is not entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of that property, unless he makes after judgment, a fresh application for execution under O. 21, r. 11 [Code of 1882, s. 235] O. 38, r. 11 [Code of 1882, s. 400] does not touch the point (f)

Sub-sec. (2): Suit for refund.—The scheme of this section is to enable the Court as a matter of administration to distribute the assets according to what seem at the time to be the rights of parties without this distribution importing a conclusive adjudication as to those rights, which may be subsequently re-adjusted in a suit brought under the penultimate paragraph of the section (m). Such a suit is virtually a suit for money had and received, and the period of limitation is three years from the date of the receipt of the assets by the defendant (n). The suit being one for money had and received, it would be premature if it were brought before the money was actually paid to the defendant. A mere order for the payment of money under the section is not sufficient to found the action (o).

Suit by subsequent mortgagee to recover balance of money realized by sale under a prior mortgage.—A mortgages his property to A. He then mortgages the same property to B. Subsequently he executes a further charge on the property in favour of A. A sues X on the first mortgage, joining B as a defendant, and obtains a decree on the mortgage. The property is sold in execution of the decree and a balance of Rs. 12,000 which remains after satisfying A's decree is deposited in Court. A then obtains a decree for sale on the further charge and in execution of the decree draws out the balance deposited in Court. B is not joined as a party to this suit, nor is any notice given to him that A was drawing out of Court the balance of Rs. 12,000. B then sues A to recover the amount drawn out by A, that is, Rs. 12,000. Such a suit is not one under sub-sec. (2), and the period of limitation applicable to the suit is 12 years under art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The suit is really one to enforce payment of money charged upon immovable property within the meaning of that article (j).

Declaratory suit.—Is a decree holder claiming under this section entitled to file a suit for a declaration that another decree holder is not entitled to receive distribution, and for an injunction restraining him from receiving payment, before distribution of the assets by the Court, or is he bound to wait until actual distribution is made and then sue for a refund? In a Madras case (q), Sadasiva Ayyar, J., expressed the opinion that he is entitled to sue for a declaration.

Inquiry as to the validity of decree.—There is a conflict of opinion whether or not a claimant's objection that a decree obtained by another claimant is collusive, that is, obtained by the latter in collusion with the judgment debtor, the Court has power to inquire into the validity of the decree. The High Court of Calcutta (r) has held that it has. On the other hand, the High Courts of Madras (s) and Bombay (t) have held that it has not. The latter view, it is submitted, is correct. If a Court executing a decree has no power to go behind the decree [see notes to s. 38], much less has a Court acting under the provisions of this section (u).

Rights of Government not affected.—A judgment debt due to the Crown is entitled to precedence in execution (i)

Attorneys lien.—The section does not apply to a solicitor's common law lien for costs. That lien is not affected by the attachment of the decree (ii)

Rights created by this section not affected by insolvency.—An order made under this section for rateable distribution is not affected by the insolvency of the judgment debtor subsequent to the making of the order. But the order will be confined in its operation to the assets of the judgment debtor realized up to the date of the order of adjudication. Assets realized after the date of the order of adjudication will vest in the Official Assignee (x)

Appeal.—An order made under this section is not appealable unless all the conditions enumerated in sec 47 are present (y). One of those conditions is that the question decided by the Court should be one which arose between the parties to the suit, that is, between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holder on the other (z). Hence an order made under this section determining a question between two rival decree holders in which the judgment debtor had no interest does not fall within sec 47 and no second appeal lies from such order (a). But if the question determined by the order arose not only between rival decree holders, but also between the judgment debtor on the one hand and the decree holders on the other, the order would be within sec 47, and would therefore be appealable (b).

Revision.—As to revision see the undermentioned cases (c)

RESISTANCE TO EXECUTION.

74. [S. 330] Where the Court is satisfied that the holder of a decree for the possession of immovable property or that the purchaser of immovable property sold in execution of a decree has been resisted or obstructed in obtaining possession of the property by the judgment-debtor or some person on his behalf and that such resistance or obstruction was without any just cause, the Court may, at the instance of the decree holder or purchaser, order the judgment-debtor or such other person to be detained in the civil prison for a term which may extend to thirty days and may further direct that the decree-holder or purchaser be put into possession of the property

PART III.

Incidental Proceedings.

COMMISSIONS.

Power of Court to issue
commissions

75. [New.] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, the Court may issue a commission—

- (a) to examine any person ;
- (b) to make a local investigation ;
- (c) to examine or adjust accounts or
- (d) to make a partition.

The general powers of Courts in regard to commissions have been summarised in this section. The detailed provisions are set forth in O 26

Commission to another
Court

76. [S. 385.] (1) A commission for the examination of any person may be issued to any Court (not being a High Court) situate in a province other than the province in which the Court of issue is situate and having jurisdiction in the place in which the person to be examined resides

(2) Every Court receiving a commission for the examination of any person under sub-section (1) shall examine him or cause him to be examined pursuant thereto, and the commission, when it has been duly executed, shall be returned together with the evidence taken under it to the Court from which it was issued, unless the order for issuing the commission has otherwise directed, in which case the commission shall be returned in terms of such order.

See O 26, r 4

Letter of request,

77. [New] In lieu of issuing a commission the Court may issue a letter of request to examine a witness residing at any place not within British India.

Jurisdiction—A suit against the Secretary of State for India can only be brought in the Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the cause of action arose. The words 'dwell' or 'reside,' or 'carry on business' or 'personally work for gain' which occur in secs 16, 19 and 20 of the Code and cl 12 of the Letters Patent do not apply to the Secretary of State in Council (i)

Information exhibited by Advocate General.—The power of the Advocate General to exhibit information in the nature of actions at law or bills in equity was expressly declared by sec 111 of the East India Company Act 1813 [53 Geo 3, c 155] and kept alive by sec 2 of the Government of India Act 1833 [3 & 4 Will 4 c 85] and again by sec 1 of the Government of India Act 1853 [16 & 17 Vict, c 95] and by sec 29 of the Government of India Act 1858 [21 & 22 Vict c 106] now merged in sec 114 of the Government of India Act 1915 [5 and 6 Geo 5 c 61]. As the Governor General in Council was precluded by sec 22 of the Indian Councils Act 1861 [24 & 25 Vict, c 67] from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted it was thought that sec 416 of the Code of 1882 [now sub section (1) of the present section] in so far as it excluded information exhibited by the Advocate General did not comprehend a full and accurate statement of the law on the subject. Accordingly sub section (2) was added to show that the power exists and is not affected by the section.

Appeals—The rule laid down in this section applies also to appeals (j)

80. [S 424] No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the relief which he claims, and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left.

Changes in the section—This section corresponds with sec 424 of the Code of 1882. The words 'any act' have been substituted for the words 'an act' and the words 'by such public officer' for the words 'by him'. See notes below.

Notice to Secretary of State

Provisions of this section imperative—The section is a matter of civil procedure and cannot be said to be subject to section 63 of the Government of India Act, see note. Scope of section under section 79. The section is explicit and mandatory and admits of no implications or exceptions (k). The language of this section is imperative and absolutely debars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with its provisions. If the provisions of the section are not complied with the plaint must be rejected under O 7 r 11 (d) (l).

(i) Datta v Secretary of State (1887)

Object of notice—The object of the notice required by this section is to give the Secretary of State or the public officer an opportunity to reconsider his legal position and to make amends or settle the claim, if so advised, without litigation (m).

Notice must be given after accrual of cause of action—A notice given before the cause of action has arisen is invalid (n).

Devolution of defendant's interest upon Government pending suit—No notice is necessary if the defendant's interests devolve upon Government during the suit, e.g., a private railway company is taken over by Government, for then the suit has already been instituted (o). But if the suit was instituted in a Court which has no jurisdiction to try a suit against Government, and the devolution occurs after the plaint has been returned for presentation to the proper Court, notice is necessary (p).

Sufficiency of notice.—In some cases a liberal construction was put upon the section and it was held that a notice is sufficient if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned of the nature of the suit to be filed (q), and that a notice is not invalid merely because it is given by two out of three plaintiffs (r). But since the Privy Council judgment in Bhagchand v Secretary of State (s) strict compliance with the terms of the section has been enforced and a notice given by one of two plaintiffs has been held to be insufficient (t). Again in a case where the plaintiff's father gave notice and then plaintiff filed a suit after the father's death, the notice given by the father in respect of the same cause of action was held to be insufficient (u).

It is essential that the notice should state the names, descriptions, and places of residence of all the plaintiffs. Hence where a suit was brought by sixty three plaintiffs, but the notice contained the names, descriptions and places of residence of only two of them, it was held that the notice was insufficient (v).

If the public officer sued is a receiver appointed by the Court, the application for leave to sue the receiver does not dispense with the necessity for notice (w).

Waiver of notice—It is competent to the Secretary of State to waive notice and he may be estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of notice at a late stage of the trial. Thus where the Secretary of State took objection to the sufficiency of notice in his written statement, but raised no issue on the point when issues were settled, and took no objection during the trial, the Court held that another defendant was not competent to raise this issue at a later stage as the Secretary of State had waived notice (x).

Notice to Secretary of State—Where a suit is to be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, notice to him under this section must be given in all cases, whether the act in respect of which the suit is to be brought purports to be done by him in his official capacity or not. The words "in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" refer to the public officer and not to the Secretary of State. The substitution of the words "by such public officer" for the words "by him" which occurred in the corresponding sec. 424 of the Code of 1882 makes the point quite clear. If a railway is owned by Government a suit in respect of a claim against the Railway Administration must be brought against the Secretary of State after notice under this section (y). Notice of a claim to the Railway Administration under sec. 77 of the Railways Act of 1890, does not dispense with the necessity for notice under this section to the Secretary of State (z).

Notice to public officer—Act purporting to be done in official capacity.—The present section corresponds with sec. 424 of the Code of 1882 except that the word 'any' has been substituted for the word "an," and the words 'such public officer' have been substituted for the word "him." According to the concise Oxford Dictionary, to "purport" in this context means to "be intended to seem." Applying this meaning, the words "any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity" mean any act "intended to seem to be done by him in his official capacity" (a). If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting the act clearly purports to be done in his official capacity "within the ordinary meaning of the term 'purport' (b). In a case where the Official Receiver of the Calcutta High Court was sued for negligence in that he failed to collect rents, Rankin, C. J., held that the section applied to non-feasance as well as to misfeasance and referred to the definition of the word 'act' in the General Clauses Act as extending to illegal omissions (c).

Notice to the Secretary of State must be given in all cases whatever the character of the suit may be (d) but notice to a public officer is to be given in those cases only where the suit is in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity. It follows that notice to a public officer is not necessary where the act done by him is not within his sphere of duties. Thus where a public officer took possession of property which he had no authority to seize and was sued for trespass, it was held that the suit was not against him in his official capacity, but as a private individual and therefore no notice was necessary (e). So also when an investigating police officer assaulted a witness (f) or a sub-overseer was assaulted by his superior officer and the suit was for damages, the act complained of was not an act purporting to be done by the defendant in his official capacity, and therefore no notice was necessary (g). No notice is necessary when the suit is not in respect of an act done by the public officer, although he is made a defendant, as when a Collector is made a party defendant for the protection of the title of a minor (h), or when the suit is against the Official Trustee for the determination of the rights of beneficiaries to trust funds in his hands (i), or when the Official Assignee, as representing the estate of an insolvent, is made a party in a suit for declaration of title and no act of the Official Assignee is complained of except an objection to the entry of plaintiff's name on the record of rights (j).

The decisions are conflicting as to whether notice is necessary under this section when a public officer acts mala fide, that is, maliciously or dishonestly, it being held in some cases that it is not (l) while in others that it is (l) necessary. The former proceed on the ground that an act done mala fide by a public officer cannot be said to be an "act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity." The latter proceed on the ground that the section makes no distinction between acts done bona fide and acts done mala fide and that notice is necessary in every case where a public officer purports to act in his official capacity. Thus a suit against a police officer, for having searched the house of the plaintiff, dragged him to the thana, and detained and kept him in confinement for several hours maliciously and without cause could be filed according to the former view without notice because the officer having acted illegally and in bad faith could not be said to have acted in his capacity as a public officer (m). Similarly, in a suit against a District Magistrate and two officers of Police for conspiracy and malicious arrest and search, it was held that the suit was one in which the public officer was sued in respect of an act done in bad faith and therefore no notice under this section was required (n). On the other hand, in Jogendra Nath Roy v. Price (o) where the plaintiff sued a District

Magistrate for malicious arrest and search, the High Court of Allahabad in a suit against a Police Officer to recover certain books seized by him in a search, said that if he seized the books, which was denied, he did so in his capacity of Police Officer and that notice was necessary under this section (p). In a case decided by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (q), A sued B and attached before judgment certain wood belonging to B. Thereafter the village munsif sold the wood for arrears of revenue due from B though there was no necessity to sell the whole and after retaining the amount due for arrears of revenue handed over the balance of the sale proceeds to B, although he had knowledge of the attachment. Thereupon A brought a suit against the village munsif for damages, alleging that the munsif had colluded with B and paid the balance to him. The Court found that the munsif was aware of the attachment and that he dishonestly and fraudulently paid over the balance of the sale proceeds to B. On the question of notice under this section, the Full Bench held that the munsif was entitled to notice under this section, although he acted mala fide in the discharge of his duties. The latest decisions of all the High Courts are in favour of the view that notice is necessary even if the act is done mala fide and it has been held that notice is necessary when a suit is filed against a Police Officer for malicious prosecution (r). In this connection it is well to recall the dictum of the Privy Council in Bhagchand v. Secretary of State (s) that the section admits of no implications or exceptions.

Suits on contracts and torts—The High Court of Bombay had held in a series of cases that the requirement of notice was limited to suits on tort and that no notice was necessary in suits founded on contract (t) In Prasanna v. Bonnerjee (u) Rani, C J, said 'It is, no doubt, broadly speaking, true that such a section as this is not intended to apply to actions ex contractu and there are other classes of actions no doubt which do not come within the meaning of the expression 'in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in his official capacity' The learned Chief Justice then referred to the case of Sharpton v. Fulham Guardians (t) In that case the guardians were under a public duty to supply a receiving house for poor children and had employed a builder to alter a mansion house so as to make it a receiving house for the children of paupers The guardians were sued by the builder on the contract with him Farwell, J, held that the guardians were not subject to a special period of limitation provided by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, because it was a breach of a private contract that was complained of and that it was not a complaint by a number of children or by a member of the public in respect of a public duty In another Calcutta case (u) the section was held applicable to a suit to enforce a mortgage by a common manager under sec 90 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 9 of 1883

Declaratory suits—The section applies to suits for a declaration (x)

Suits for injunction—There was a conflict of decisions as to whether the section applied to suits where the relief claimed was a perpetual injunction This is settled by the Privy Council judgment in Bhagchand v. Secretary of State (y) approving Calcutta, Madras, and Allahabad decisions (z) that the section and the corresponding section 124 of the previous Codes should be strictly complied with and that they are applicable to all forms of action and all kinds of relief The Privy Council overruled Bombay decisions that no notice was necessary in a suit for injunction against a public officer or even against the Secretary of State when the act to be restrained might occasion serious or irreparable damage (a) In delivering the judgment of the Board Viscount Sumner said 'To argue, as the appellants did, that the plaintiffs had a right urgently calling for a remedy, while sec 80 is a mere procedure, is fallacious, for sec 80 imposes a statutory and unqualified obligation upon the Court So, too, the contention that the 'act purporting to be done by the Collector in his official capacity in respect of which the suit was begun was his threatened enforcement of payment is fallacious also since the illegality, if any is in the order for recovery of the tax If that was valid there was nothing to be restrained Hence though the act to be restrained is something apprehended in the future the act alone in respect of which the suit lies if at all, is the order already completed and issued In a Bombay case it was left open whether if with notice of a suit the intended defendant proceeded to act in such a way as to anticipate a hostile order of the Court in the intended suit, the Court could restore the status quo ante on an interlocutory application before the trial (b)

Application under Sch II, para 17—Notice not necessary.—An application to file an agreement to refer a dispute to arbitration, though registered as a suit, is not a suit and notice is not necessary when the other party is the Secretary of State (c)

By what name public officer to be sued—The suits referred to in this section are suits against the public officer personally in respect of acts done in his official capacity. The public officer cannot be sued by his official name unless he is a corporation sole (d)

Death of complainant after notice but before suit—Notice is given by A under this section to the Secretary of State of a proposed suit. A dies before the institution of the suit. The notice by A does not enure for the benefit of his legal representative, and he must give a fresh notice under this section before instituting the suit (e)

Amendment of plaint—Where notice of a proposed suit is once given, it is not necessary to give a fresh notice of two months if the plaint has to be amended owing to discovery of facts not within the plaintiff's knowledge at the time of the institution of the suit (f). But no amendment will be allowed if the effect of the amendment is to convert the suit into another of a different character, e.g., a suit based on negligence into one based on nuisance. In such a case a fresh suit must be brought after giving fresh notice as required by this section (g).

Notice to Collector.—A Collector is entitled to notice under this section of a suit for damages in respect of an act done by him in his official capacity as agent of the Court of Wards, but he is not entitled to such notice if he is sued or joined as a party not by reason of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity, but merely for the protection of a minor's title (h)

Notice to Cantonment Committee—A Cantonment Committee constituted under the Indian Cantonments Act, 1889, is a "public officer" within the meaning of this section (i)

Municipal Council—Notice not necessary—A Municipal Council is not a public officer and no notice is necessary when a suit is filed against a Municipality (j)

Notice to Official Assignee—The Official Assignee is a public officer, and he is entitled to notice under this section before a suit is filed against him in respect of any act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity (l). The same rule applies to a Receiver appointed under the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 (l). But no notice is necessary when the Official Assignee or Receiver is made a party to a suit to realize a charge on the property of the insolvent which has vested in him and no act or omission on the part of the Receiver is alleged (m). The Bombay High Court had held that no notice was necessary in a suit to restrain an Official Receiver from selling goods claimed by the plaintiff (n), but as stated above this case has been overruled by Privy Council (o). The Lahore High Court has accordingly held that in such a case notice is necessary (p)

Provided that the object of the suit is to enforce the private rights of the head or of the subjects of the foreign State

The language of that proviso was liable to be construed as conferring upon the head of a foreign State a general power to litigate in respect of the private rights of his subjects. Such however, was not the object and the language has accordingly been modified to make it clear that the object of litigation by a foreign State must be the enforcement of a private right vested in the head of the State or in an officer of the State as such.

Private right vested in the head of a State—That is those private rights of a State that must be enforced through a Court of Justice as distinguished from its political rights (z)

Foreign State as plaintiff—A suit by a foreign State must be brought in the name by which it has been recognized by His Majesty (y)

85. [S 432] (1) Persons specially appointed by order of the Government at the request of any Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief, whether in subordinate alliance with the British Government or otherwise, and whether residing within or without British India, or at the request of any person competent, in the opinion of the Government, to act on behalf of such Prince or Chief, to prosecute or defend any suit on his behalf, shall be deemed to be the recognized agents by whom appearances, acts and applications under this Code may be made or done on behalf of such Prince or Chief

Persons specially appointed by Government to prosecute or defend for Princes or Chiefs

(2) An appointment under this section may be made for the purpose of a specified suit or of several specified suits, or for the purpose of all such suits as it may from time to time be necessary to prosecute or defend on behalf of the Prince or Chief

(3) A person appointed under this section may authorize or appoint persons to make appearances and applications and do acts in any such suit or suits as if he were himself a party thereto

Recognized agents specially appointed under this section - This section is an enabling section. It enables a Sovereign Prince or Prince Consort to appoint or discontinue through recognized agents specially appointed in that behalf, it does not prevent the institution of a suit by a Sovereign Prince or Prince Consort or through a recognized agent appointed under this section (Article 1902 & 1903).

At the time of signing the plaintiff A B was a specially appointed ts'ao on behalf of the Ch'ieh under this ts'ao. The plaintiff is nevertheless good if A B is subsequently appointed ts'ao on behalf of the Ch'ieh and if the appointment is made before the expiration of the period of limitation prescribed by the suit (su).

A Political Agent is especially appointed under this section cannot take on behalf of a Prince (1)

Discovery A foreign State is not exempt from giving discovery (c)

86. [S 433] (1) Any such Prince or Chief, and any ambassador or envoy of a foreign State, may, with the consent of the Governor-General in Council, certified by the signature of a Secretary to the Government of India, but not without such consent, be sued in any competent Court.

(2) Such consent may be given with respect to a specified suit or to several specified suits, or with respect to all suits of any specified class or classes, and may specify, in the case of any suit or class of suits, the Court in which the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy may be sued, but it shall not be given unless it appears to the Government that the Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy—

- (a) has instituted a suit in the Court against the person desiring to sue him, or
- (b) by himself or another trades within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, or
- (c) is in possession of immovable property situate within those limits and is to be sued with reference to such property or for money charged thereon.

(3) No such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy shall be arrested under this Code, and, except with the consent of the Governor-General in Council certified as aforesaid, no decree shall be executed against the property of any such Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy.

(4) The Governor-General in Council may, by notification in the Gazette of India, authorize a Local Government and any Secretary to that Government to exercise, with respect to any Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy named in the notification, the functions assigned by the foregoing subsections to the Governor-General in Council and a Secretary to the Government of India, respectively.

(5) A person may, as a tenant of immovable property, sue, without such consent as is mentioned in this section, a Prince, Chief, ambassador or envoy from whom he holds or claims to hold the property.

Consent shall not be given "unless it appears to the Government that"—The words 'it appears to the Government that' have been added in sub section (2) to make it clear that the decision of the Government is final and not open to question by the Court. The contrary was assumed in the undermentioned cases (d)

Consent must be obtained before institution of suit.—This section provides that a Sovereign Prince or Ruling Chief may be sued in any competent Court with the consent of the Governor General in Council. Such consent must be obtained before the institution of the suit, consent given after the institution of the suit is not a sufficient consent under this section. If the consent is not obtained before the institution of the suit, the proper course is to dismiss the suit, or, perhaps, allow the plaintiff to withdraw it with liberty to bring a fresh suit under O 23, r 1 [Code of 1882, s 373] (e)

Waiver of objection to want of consent.—As stated in the notes to s 21 where a Court has no jurisdiction at all to entertain a suit, the objection to its jurisdiction may be taken at any stage of the suit even though the defendant may have at one time waived the objection, for a defect in the jurisdiction cannot be cured by waiver, but if the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction, the defect may be cured by waiver on the part of the defendant. If a suit is entertained against a Sovereign Prince without the consent of the Governor General in Council, the case is one of irregular exercise of jurisdiction, and if the defendant does not object until the suit is ripe for hearing, he will be deemed to have waived the objection to jurisdiction. This was decided by the High Court of Bombay after an exhaustive review of the authorities on the subject (f). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Madras on the ground that 'the recognition of cases of waiver, as excepted from the ordinary provisions of International Law as understood in England, cannot be imported into the clear language of the Indian Code' (g). The Patna High Court has gone to the length of holding that applications for adjournment made on behalf of a Ruling Chief amount to a waiver of his privilege and debars him from objecting to the jurisdiction of the Court (h).

The fact that a Sovereign Prince chooses to waive his privilege in one suit does not preclude him from pleading it in another suit (i)

Suit against person who subsequently becomes a Puling Chief—Where a person attains the rank of a Puling Chief after the institution of a suit against him the suit cannot be continued against him without the consent of the Governor General in Council (j)

Immovable property—Where a Puling Chief and a private individual are co-owners in the profits of land within British India a suit by the latter against the Puling Chief for his share of the profits under s. 105 of the Agra Tenancy Act [U. P. Act 2 of 1901] cannot be instituted in a Court of British India without the consent of the Governor General in Council (l)

Money charged on immovable property—Unless maintenance has been made a charge upon immovable property a mere claim for maintenance is not a claim for money charged on immovable property within the meaning of sub-section (2) of (c) (f)

Suit against Ruling Chief in his private capacity—The provisions of this section apply whether the suit is brought against a Ruling Chief in his Sovereign capacity or in his private capacity e.g. as a trustee of a temple in British India (i)

Sovereign Prince—The Maharajah of Hill Tipperah is a Sovereign Prince within the meaning of this section in that the Tipperah State governs itself without dependence on any foreign power. It makes and administers its own laws and the Maharajah limitedly exercises the power of life and death within his own territory. Its acknowledgement of the British Government as the paramount power and the nazar paid on the recognition by that Government of succeeding Maharajahs do not take away from it the status of a Sovereign State (n)

Ruling Chief—The Desai of Patah is a Puling Chief within the meaning of this section (o). The Kurundwal Jahageerdars are also Ruling Chiefs (p). The Maharaja of Benares is also a Ruling Chief (q).

Sub-section (4)—For notifications issued under this sub-section see General Statutory Rules and Orders Vol I pp 625-638

Limitation—In computing the period of limitation the plaintiff is not entitled to deduct the time spent in obtaining a certificate under this section (r). Sec. 13 of the Indian Limitation Act 1908 provides that in computing the period of limitation prescribed for a suit the time during which the defendant has been absent from British India shall be excluded. The Calcutta High Court has held that the time must be excluded even if the defendant was carrying on business in British India through an authorised agent during his absence (s). The High Court of Bombay however has held that sec. 13 of the Limitation Act must be read with secs. 85-86 and 87 of the Code so far as a Sovereign Prince or a Ruling Chief is concerned and that such a Prince or Chief can be held to reside in British India within the meaning of sec. 13 of the Limitation Act in so far as he actually carries on business through his representatives in British India (t).

another person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to the rightful claimant, such other person may institute a suit of interpleader against all the claimants for the purpose of obtaining a decision as to the person to whom the payment or delivery shall be made and of obtaining indemnity for himself

Provided that where any suit is pending in which the rights of all parties can properly be decided, no such suit of interpleader shall be instituted

See O 3a below

Changes in the section —This section corresponds with s 470 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars

- (1) The words the same debt sum of money or other property movable or immovable have been substituted for the words the same payment or property
- (2) The words who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs have been borrowed from R S C O 57 r 2 and have been substituted for the words whose only interest therein is that of a mere stakeholder

What is an interpleader suit—An interpleader suit is one in which the real dispute is between the defendants only and the defendants interpl ad that is to say plead against each other instead of pleading against the plaintiff as in an ordinary suit. In every interpleader suit there must be some debt or sum of money or other property in dispute between the defendants only and the plaintiff must be a person who claims no interest therein other than for charges or costs and who is ready to pay or deliver it to such of the defendants as may be declared by the Court to be entitled to it. Thus suppose certain property is claimed by A as well as by B, and X is in possession of that property and claims no interest in the property himself and is ready and willing to deliver it to such party as may be declared by the Court to be the rightful owner of it, A as plaintiff may institute an interpleader suit against A and B as defendants. In such a case A will as a rule, be dismissed from the suit at the first hearing after his costs are provided for, and A and B will be left to interplead and to fight the matter out between themselves as if one of them was plaintiff and the other was defendant (O 35, r 4). But before the plaintiff is dismissed from the suit, he must deposit the property in dispute in Court (O 35 r 2).

Who claims no interest other than for charges or costs.—These words indicate that the plaintiff in an interpleader suit must be in a real position of impartiality. A railway company which claims no interest in goods in its possession other than a lien on the goods for wharfage, demurrage and freight may institute an interpleader suit, where the goods are claimed by two persons adversely to each other (u).

I holds in his hands a sum of Rs. 5,000 which is claimed by B and C adversely to each other. I institutes an interpleader suit against B and C. It is found at the hearing that I had entered into an agreement with B before the institution of the suit that if B succeeded in the suit he should accept from I Rs. 4,000 only in full satisfaction of his claim. Here I has by virtue of the agreement an interest in the subject matter of the suit, and he is not therefore entitled to institute an interpleader suit. The suit must be dismissed (r).

A party who has taken an indemnity from one of the claimants is not entitled to file an interpleader suit (w).

A suit is not necessarily an interpleader suit and subject to the provisions of this section, merely because one of the reliefs claimed by the plaintiff requires the defendants to interplead together concerning certain claims. The Court must have regard to all the prayers of the plaint to determine the exact nature of the suit (x).

ARBITRATION.

89. [New.] (1) Save in so far as is otherwise provided by the Indian Arbitration Act, 1899, or by any other law for the time being in force, all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise, and all proceedings thereunder, shall be governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule.

Arbitration.

(2) The provisions of the Second Schedule shall not affect any arbitration pending at the commencement of this Code, but shall apply to any arbitration after that date under any agreement or reference made before the commencement of this Code.

Arbitration—The provisions of the Code of 1882 relating to arbitration have been transferred with certain modifications to a separate Schedule [Sch II] "in the hope that at no distant date they may be transferred into a comprehensive Arbitration Act"

The effect of the section is that that all references to arbitration whether by an order in a suit or otherwise and all proceedings thereunder are governed by the provisions contained in the second Schedule except where the Arbitration Act or any other law relating to arbitration applies (y) But see notes to O 23, r 3, "Submission and award"

Indian Arbitration Act 9 of 1899, application of the Act.—The Act came into force on the first day of July 1899. It relates to "arbitration by agreement without the intervention of a Court of Justice," that is to say, to private arbitrations only. Sec 3 of the Act provides that sections 523 to 526 of the Code of 1882 [now paras 17, 19 and 20 of Sch II] shall not apply to any submission or arbitration to which the Act applies. The question then arises, to what cases does the Act apply? Sec 2 of the Act provides that the Act "shall apply only in cases where, if the subject matter submitted to arbitration were the subject of a suit, the suit could, whether with leave or otherwise, be instituted in a Presidency town." The terms of that section show that two conditions must be present before the provisions of the Arbitration Act can be applied to an agreement to refer matters in dispute to arbitration, namely, (1) that there should not be a suit pending in respect of those matters (z), and (2) that the case must be one in respect of which if either party wanted to bring a suit the suit could be instituted in a Presidency town. It is only to such cases that the Arbitration Act applies. In other cases the provisions of paras 17, 19 and 20 of Sch II apply.

SPECIAL CASE

90. [New] Where any persons agree in writing to state a case for the opinion of the Court then the Court shall try and determine the same in the manner prescribed.

Power to state case for opinion of Court

See O. 36 below.

Re opening of case.—It is settled practice that where a special case is stated by consent it can only be re-opened by mutual consent (a).

SUITS RELATING TO PUBLIC MATTERS

91. [New] (1) In the case of a public nuisance the Advocate General or two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General may institute a suit though no special damage has been caused for a declaration and injunction or for such other relief as may be appropriate to the circumstances of the case.

Public nuisances

(2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwise affect any right of suit which may exist independently of its provisions.

This section is new. It creates a right of action where there was none before.

Remedies for a public nuisance.—Nuisances are of two kinds—(1) public and (2) private.

A public nuisance is an act or illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity, or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right [Indian Penal Code, s 268]

Where a person commits a public nuisance—

- (a) he is liable to criminal prosecution under the Indian Penal Code,
- (b) he may be proceeded against under this section,
- (c) he is liable to damages in a suit at the instance of a private individual who suffers special damage by reason of the nuisance, that is, damage beyond what is suffered by him in common with other persons affected by the nuisance (b)

These remedies, it is conceived, are concurrent. The institution of a criminal prosecution does not bar a suit under this section (c), nor does the institution of a suit under this section bar a criminal prosecution, though cases may occur where the Advocate-General may, in the exercise of his discretion, refuse his consent under this section where a criminal prosecution is pending in respect of the same act or omission.

Illustrations—A keeps his horses and waggons standing for an unreasonable time in the highway

(a) This is a public nuisance for which a criminal prosecution may be instituted against A

(b) Further, a suit may be instituted against A under the present section by the Advocate General, or by two or more persons with the consent in writing of the Advocate General though no special damage has been caused for an order requiring A to abate the nuisance, and for an injunction restraining him from continuing the nuisance. If the nuisance is repeated or continued, notwithstanding the injunction he is liable for contempt where the decree granting the injunction is passed by a High Court (d) or he may be proceeded against under O 21, r 32 below, or he may be punished with imprisonment or fine or both under sec 291 of the Penal Code

(c) If the horses and waggons are kept standing opposite a man's house, so that the access of customers is obstructed, the house is darkened and the people in it are annoyed by bad smells a suit may be brought against A by the occupiers for damages, the damage so caused being sufficiently special to entitle them to maintain the action (e). The mere fact that a suit has been instituted under this section against A by the Advocate General at the relation of the occupiers, or by the occupiers themselves as plaintiffs with the consent of the Advocate General, will not preclude the occupiers from maintaining a private action against A for the special damage caused to them. Quære whether they can claim damages for the special damage in a suit brought under this section? It is conceived they cannot. It is submitted that the words 'such other relief as may be appropriate' do not include such damages. In England however, persons who have suffered special damage from a public nuisance may join the Attorney General as a co plaintiff in a suit brought by the Attorney General at their relation and the Attorney General may claim an injunction, and the persons specially damaged by the nuisance may claim damages (f). The present section does not warrant such a procedure in India

The suit contemplated by this section is a suit of a public nature, exclusively brought to vindicate a public right. The section finds its place in the Part headed "Special Proceedings" under the division "Suits relating to public matters," and this affords a sufficient indication of the object of the section.

Nature of proceeding under this section.—Proceedings for a public nuisance in England were formerly commenced by an Information filed by the Attorney General in the High Court of Chancery. They are now instituted by action in the High Court of Justice [See R.S.C., O. 1, r. 1]. The action may be brought like the Information—

- (1) by the Attorney General acting ex officio, or
- (2) by the Attorney General at the relation of a private individual.

Under the present section, a suit for a public nuisance may be instituted—

- (1) by the Advocate General acting ex officio, or
- (2) by the Advocate General at the instance of relators, or
- (3) by two or more persons having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General.

Difference between suit by Advocate General acting ex officio and suit by him at the relation of private individuals.—Except for the purposes of costs, there is no difference between an ex officio suit and a suit at the relation of private individuals. In both cases the Sovereign, as parens patriae, sues by the Advocate General (g). "When the Attorney General proceeds at the relation of a private person or a corporation, he takes the proceeding as representing the Crown, and the Crown through the Attorney General is really a party to the litigation. It is quite true that when the proceeding is taken at the relation of a subject, the practice is to insert his name in the proceedings as the relator and to make him responsible for the costs, but I do not think that this practice in any sense makes the relator a party to the proceedings although he is responsible for the costs, any more than (to take a converse case) an infant who brings an action is responsible for the costs of it. If I am right, it would seem that the practice of making the relator directly responsible for the costs of the action had its origin not in the protection of the defendant but of the Crown" (h). "When once the matter is in the hands of the Attorney General it becomes substantially a public proceeding, in which the Attorney General, if there be no relator, becomes as prosecutor responsible for the costs, while if a relator is introduced, the responsibility for costs is upon the latter" (i).

Relator's interest in the suit.—A relator need not have any personal interest in the matter, except as one of the public, he need not in fact, be himself damaged at all' (j).

Interest of persons suing with consent of Advocate General.—Persons suing for a public nuisance with the consent of the Advocate General under the section need not have any personal interest in the matter of the suit, except as members of the public. They are entitled to sue under this section, 'though,' to use the words of the section, "no special damage has been caused [to them]." In the other words, they need not have a cause of action in themselves.

Injunction.—The following are some of the leading principles by which the Courts are guided in granting injunctions—

- 1 The injury complained of must be either irreparable or continuous (l). The remedy by way of injunction is therefore not appropriate for damage which is in its nature temporary and intermittent (l) or is accidental and occasional (m) or for an interference with legal rights which is trifling in amount and effect (n)

- 2 Apprehension of future mischief from something in itself lawful and capable of being done without creating a nuisance is no ground for an injunction (o) "There must, if no actual damage is proved, be proof of imminent danger, and there must also be proof that the apprehended damage will, if it comes, be very substantial" (p)
- 3 Though no substantial damage is proved, the Court may grant an injunction if the defendants claim the right to continue doing that which the Court has held they are not entitled to do (q)
- 4 Where an illegal act is committed which in its nature tends to the injury of the public, an injunction will be granted to restrain the act without proof of actual injury to the public (r)
- 5 Where the plaintiff has proved his right to an injunction against a nuisance, it is no part of the duty of the Court to enquire in what way the defendant can best remove it, the plaintiff is entitled to an injunction at once, and it is the duty of the defendant to find his own way out of the difficulty whatever inconvenience or expense it may put him to But where the difficulty of removing the nuisance is considerable the Court may suspend the operation of the injunction for a time (s)
- 6 No length of time can legalize a public nuisance Though twelve years user may bind the right of an individual, yet the public have a right to demand the suppression of a nuisance apart from the length of time for which it may have continued (t)
- 7 A public nuisance is not excused on the ground that it causes some convenience or advantage [Indian Penal Code, s 268]

"Declaration"—A suit may be instituted under this section by two or more Mahomedans for a declaration that they are entitled to carry tabuts in procession along a public road for immersion in the sea against persons who obstruct them in doing so and for an injunction restraining interference in the exercise of this right (u)

"Other relief."—The removal of a public nuisance, e.g., encroachment on a public street may be directed by the Court under this part of the section (v)

Sub section (2)—The Code of Criminal Procedure contains provisions for the removal of a public nuisance by summary proceedings before a Magistrate (w) The High Court of Calcutta has held that where special damage is caused to a private individual by a public nuisance, he has a right of suit against the person causing the nuisance for a removal of the nuisance, and a Civil Court may pass a decree to that effect, notwithstanding that an order for the like purpose might be made by a Magistrate (x) This right is saved by sub-sec (2)

Instances of public nuisance.— 'Public or common nuisances affect the King's subjects at large, or some considerable portion of them, such as the inhabitants of a town, and the person therein offending is liable to criminal prosecution. A private nuisance affects only one person or a determinate number of persons, and is the ground of civil proceedings only' (y) Building over any part of a public street is a public nuisance, for such act must necessarily cause obstruction to persons who may have occasion to use their public right over the part encroached upon. The public is entitled to the full width of the public street, however wide it may be, and whoever appropriates any part of the street by building over it infringes the right of the public quoad the part built over (z) An obstruction is not the less a nuisance, because it is on a part of the street not commonly used, or otherwise leaves room enough for the ordinary amount of traffic (a) On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta has held that as regards tidal navigable rivers, a slight encroachment does not necessarily constitute a public nuisance. It seems to us rather," the Court said, "that there must be some evidence that such encroachment causes one of the results specified in sec. 268" [of the Indian Penal Code] (b)

Acts which merely offend the sentiments of a class do not amount to a public nuisance. In India it must often happen that acts are done by the followers of one creed which must be offensive to the sentiments of those who follow other creeds. Upon this principle it has been held that the placing of a Mahomedan symbol in the neighbourhood of a Hindu temple is not a public nuisance, though likely to cause annoyance to Hindus (c) Similarly, it is not a public nuisance to expose on the verandah of a house, meat cut up for a dinner, though it may annoy the feelings of Jains frequenting a temple close by the house (d) But wilfully slaughtering cattle in a public street so that the groans and blood of the animals could be heard and seen by the passers by is a public nuisance, for it must necessarily cause annoyance to every one of the passers by Hindu, European, Mahomedan or other, who was not utterly devoid, not merely of refinement, but also of all proper feelings (e)

- (a) removing any trustee ;
- (b) appointing a new trustee ;
- (c) vesting any property in a trustee ;
- (d) directing accounts and inquiries ;
- (e) declaring what proportion of the trust-property or of the interest therein shall be allocated to any particular object of the trust ;
- (f) authorizing the whole or any part of the trust-property to be let, sold, mortgaged or exchanged ;
- (g) settling a scheme ; or
- (h) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require.

(2) Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub-section (1) shall be instituted in respect of any such trust as is therein referred to except in conformity with the provisions of that sub-section.

Changes introduced by the section.—This section corresponds with sec 539 of the Code of 1882 except in the following particulars —

- 1 The words, ' public purposes of a charitable or religious nature,' have been substituted for the words, " public, charitable or religious purposes," to remove the misconception that " public " is merely co ordinate with " charitable " or " religious "
- 2 The words, " whether contentious or not," have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision See note below, " Whether contentious or not "
- 3 The words, " in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction," have been substituted for the words, " in the High Court or the District Court "
- 4 The words, " or any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government," have been added in order to invest Courts subordinate to District Courts with power to try cases under this section
- 5 Clause (a) is new It is intended to supersede a Madras decision, and to give effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions cited in note below, " Clause (a) removing any trustee "
- 6 Clause (d) is also new It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision cited in note below, " Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries "

- 7 Sub-section (2) is new. It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory, and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts. See note below. Sub-section (2) this section is mandatory.

Romilly's Act.—The present section has been borrowed in part from s. 2 (now s. 101) called Romilly's Act. As to the applicability of decisions under that statute to cases under the present section see the unmentioned case (f).

Object of the section.—The real object of the special provisions of sec. 23 [this section] seems to us to be clear. Persons interested in any trust were if there were a bill "join always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust" but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others. Provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate General or of the Collector of the District and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust. (g)

Representative suit and res judicata.—The suit contemplated by this section is a representative suit that is a suit which is prosecuted by individuals not for their own interests but as representatives of the general public (h). A decree in a suit under this section will therefore operate as res judicata under sec. 11, Explanation VI of the Code (i).

Jurisdiction.—The words 'within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject matter of the trust is situated' apply both to the Principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction and to the Court empowered in that behalf. The section therefore overrides cl. 12 of the Letters Patent (j). But if the trust fund is deposited with a firm at Madras and that firm has a place of business at Calcutta the Calcutta High Court has jurisdiction as the trustees could require payment at Calcutta (k). Where the trustees and the trust fund are within the jurisdiction of a Court, but the charity is to be founded in a territory outside the jurisdiction the Court has jurisdiction to pass a decree declaring the trusts upon which the fund is to be held but it cannot go further in the way of settling a scheme and it will leave it to the Court of the place in which the charity is to be carried out to settle the scheme (l). Nor can a Court apply the cy pres doctrine extra territorium (m).

Who may sue under this section.—A suit under this section may be brought—

- (1) by the Advocate General and outside the Presidency towns by the Collector or such officer as the Local Government may appoint in that behalf [see s. 93] or
- (2) by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General.

6. Clause (d) is also new. It gives legislative recognition to a Bombay decision cited in note below, "Clause (d) . directing accounts and inquiries"

- 7 Sub-section (2) is new. It is intended to give effect to the view of the section taken by the Bombay High Court that this section is mandatory, and to supersede the decision to the contrary of the other High Courts. See note below. Sub-section (2) this section is mandatory.

Romilly's Act.—The present section has been borrowed in part from 52 Geo. 3 c. 101, called Romilly's Act. As to the applicability of decisions under that statute to cases under the present section see the unmentioned case (f).

Object of the section.—The real object of the special provisions of sec. 639 [this section] seems to us to be clear. Persons interested in any trust were, if they could all join, always competent to maintain a suit against any trustee for his removal for breach of trust, but where the joining of all of them was inconvenient or impracticable it was considered desirable that some of them might sue without joining the others provided they obtained the consent of the Advocate General or of the Collector of the District, and this condition was imposed to prevent an indefinite number of reckless and harassing suits being brought against trustees by different persons interested in the trust" (g).

"Interest in the trust"—When a suit under this section is not instituted by the Advocate General it must be brought by at least two persons, and such persons must have "an interest" in the trust. S 539 of the Code of 1877 contained the words "a direct interest". Those words seem to have been taken from the judgment of Lord Eldon in In re the Bedford Charity (o). Those words also occurred in sec 539 of the Code of 1882. That section was amended by sec 44 of Act 7 of 1888, and the words "an interest" were substituted for the words "a direct interest". It must have appeared to the Legislature that the limitation of a "direct" interest was not expedient in India, and hence the section must have been amended (p). The effect of the amendment has been to widen the class of persons who are entitled to institute a suit under this section (q). Thus persons entitled to worship in a temple have such an interest in the trust as to enable them to institute a suit under this section against the trustees of the temple (r). Similarly persons residing in a village, whose business it was to conduct pilgrims to a shrine and perform the worship of the idol on their behalf were held to have a sufficient interest to entitle them to sue the shevals or ministers of the idol under this section (s). Likewise worshippers at a mosque have "an interest" within the meaning of this section in the trusts of the mosque (t). If the persons suing have an interest in the trust it is not necessary that they should have been personally affected by any act done by the person sued (u). But the interest must be an existing interest and not a mere contingency, the mere possibility of succession to the managership of trust properties in respect of which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue (v). It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the "interest" contemplated by this section must be a present and substantial interest and not sentimental or remote. Thus public Hindu temples are prima facie taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them. But the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu of another place might desire to visit a temple does not give him "an interest" in the trust sufficient to entitle him to sue under this section. Hence where a suit was brought under this section by a Hindu residing in Madras and another residing in Tellicherry in respect of a temple situated in Tellicherry, and it appeared that the former had gone to worship in the temple on one or two occasions in the past and might go there to worship in the future if business took him to Tellicherry it was held that though he had a right as a Hindu to worship in the temple, he had not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under this section (u). The Lahore High Court has held that a right of worship constitutes an interest under the section (x), but that a bare possibility of resort for worship does not give the plaintiff a locus standi (y). It has been held by the Judicial Committee that descendants of the founder of a public Hindu chattram, although only in the female line, are "persons having an interest in the trust," and consequently they are entitled to maintain a suit under this section, even though they might never themselves make use of the chattram (z).

Consent of Advocate General.—The “consent in writing” required by this section must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by name, a permission given to one applicant by name ‘and another’ is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of this section (a). The High Court of Bombay has held that a suit under this section brought by only one plaintiff with the consent of the Advocate General is bad at its institution, and the plaint cannot be amended by the addition of a second plaintiff, though the Advocate General may consent to the amendment, the reason given being that the section nowhere speaks of the consent of the Advocate General to an amendment of the plaint, and that a suit which was bad at its inception is not bettered by its amendment (b). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Madras that persons interested may be added as parties to the suit with the consent of the Advocate General under O 1, r 10. It has thus been held by that Court that if a suit is brought by A alone under this section (c) or by A and B of whom B has no interest in the trust (d), the plaint may be amended by adding C, a person interested, as a party plaintiff in either case with the consent of the Advocate General. Similarly it has been held by that Court that if a suit be brought by A and B, and neither of them has any interest in the trust, the plaint may be amended by adding the Advocate General as a plaintiff on his application (e).

The “consent in writing” required by this section is a condition precedent to the institution of the suit to which such consent relates. If, therefore, no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit, the suit must be dismissed, or the plaintiff may be allowed to withdraw the suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit. The defect cannot be rectified after the institution of the suit (f). And where such consent is given, the suit must be confined to the matters included in the consent, it is not competent to the Court to grant reliefs other than those included in the terms of the consent (g). Further where a suit is brought under this section, no amendment should be permitted without the sanction of the Advocate General. Where a plaint in a suit brought under this section is amended without the consent of the Advocate General e.g., where a new party is added as a defendant and possession of the trust property is claimed from him, the Court must dismiss the suit (h). It is an invariable practice in the Bombay Presidency for the Advocate General to endorse his consent upon the plaint (i).

The Advocate General in giving his consent has to exercise his judgment in the matter, and see not only whether the persons suing are persons who have an interest in the trust, but also whether the trust is a public trust of the character defined in the section, and whether there are prima facie grounds for thinking that there has been a breach of trust (j). Where the sanction given by the Advocate General is so worded as to indicate that the Advocate General has not exercised his judgment it is not a defect fatal to the suit, but a mere irregularity falling within the scope of sec 99, hence the decree in the suit will not be interfered with in appeal unless the irregularity is shown to have affected the decision of the suit on the merits (l).

When an order is made against the trustee of a charity under sec 5(5) of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, and the trustee without reasonable excuse fails to comply with it, he shall be deemed to have committed a breach of trust affording ground for a suit under sec. 92 of the Code, and such suit may, so far as it is based on such failure, be instituted without the previous consent of the Advocate General, and in such a suit the Court may make a decree removing the trustee (l). It is not necessary that the suit should be instituted by the party who has secured the order under the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, but the reliefs claimed must be such as arise from the failure to produce accounts (ll).

"Interest in the trust"—When a suit under this section is not instituted by the Advocate General it must be brought by at least two persons, and such persons must have "an interest" in the trust. S 539 of the Code of 1877 contained the words "a direct interest". Those words seem to have been taken from the judgment of Lord Eldon in In re the Bedford Charity (o). Those words also occurred in sec 539 of the Code of 1882. That section was amended by sec 44 of Act 7 of 1898, and the words 'an interest' were substituted for the words "a direct interest". It must have appeared to the Legislature that the limitation of a 'direct' interest was not expedient in India, and hence the section must have been amended (p). The effect of the amendment has been to widen the class of persons who are entitled to institute a suit under this section (q). Thus persons entitled to worship in a temple have such an interest in the trust as to enable them to institute a suit under this section against the trustees of the temple (r). Similarly persons residing in a village, whose business it was to conduct pilgrims to a shrine and perform the worship of the idol on their behalf were held to have a sufficient interest to entitle them to sue the shevals or ministers of the idol under this section (s). Likewise worshippers at a mosque have 'an interest' within the meaning of this section in the trusts of the mosque (t). If the persons suing have an interest in the trust it is not necessary that they should have been personally affected by any act done by the person sued (u). But the interest must be an existing interest and not a mere contingency, the mere possibility of succession to the managership of trust properties in respect of which the suit is brought is not sufficient to give a right to sue (v). It has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the interest contemplated by this section must be a present and substantial interest and not sentimental or remote. Thus public Hindu temples are prima facie taken to be dedicated for the use of all Hindus resorting to them. But the bare possibility, however remote, that a Hindu of another place might desire to visit a temple does not give him 'an interest' in the trust sufficient to entitle him to sue under this section. Hence where a suit was brought under this section by a Hindu residing in Madras and another residing in Tellicherry in respect of a temple situated in Tellicherry, and it appeared that the former had gone to worship in the temple on one or two occasions in the past and might go there to worship in the future if business took him to Tellicherry it was held that though he had a right as a Hindu to worship in the temple, he had not such an interest in the trust as to entitle him to sue under this section (w). The Lahore High Court has held that a right of worship constitutes an interest under the section (x) but that a bare possibility of resort for worship does not give the plaintiff a locus standi (y). It has been held by the Judicial Committee that descendants of the founder of a public Hindu chattram although only in the female line, are "persons having an interest in the trust," and consequently they are entitled to maintain a suit under this section, even though they might never themselves make use of the chattram (z).

Public purposes—This section relates to those charities only in which the public are interested. A trust for a public Hindu temple is a trust for a public purpose of a religious nature within the meaning of this section (m). A permanent bequest by a Parsi for the purpose of Muktaḍ ceremonies is a trust for public purposes of a religious nature for such ceremonies include prayers for the spiritual welfare of all Zoroastrians and tend to the advancement of the Zoroastrian religion (n). A Mahomedan wakf is a trust for public purposes of a charitable and religious nature (o) and the trust may be for the sale of a property in India to provide funds for the establishment of a boarding house for Hajis at Mecca (p). If the reliefs specified in the section are claimed with reference to a wakf the section applies (q). A muff that is otherwise private does not become public simply because some persons are fed when gurus is performed and a water pandal is maintained in the muff during the hot season (r). But where a number of the public had always used a temple to which a dharmashala was attached and the surplus funds not required for the service of the temple were to be applied to feeding travellers and maintaining a sadarant it was held that the intention of the founder was to devote the property to public purposes of a religious and charitable nature (s). A trust is not the less a trust for a public purpose because the main object of the trust is the support of fakirs of a particular sect and the propagation of the tenets of that sect (t).

"Any alleged breach of trust."—These words are not equivalent to "any alleged breach of any admitted trust." It is not therefore a condition precedent to the applicability of the section that the trust alleged by the plaintiffs is admitted by the defendants (u).

"Where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust."—To bring a suit within this section there must either be a breach of trust or the directions of the Court must be necessary for the administration of the trust. The directions, which we referred to in this section are such as are necessary for the carrying out of the trust and as are given to a trustee, either the existing trustee where there is one or the new trustee, where one is to be appointed. The nature of the reliefs expressly mentioned shows what is meant by the words "deemed necessary for administration of any such trust" (v). The mere appointment of a Mutawalli is not a direction within the meaning of this section (w).

"Whether contentious or not."—These words are new. They are intended to give effect to a decision of the Calcutta High Court under sec. 539 of the Code of 1882

Who may be sued under this section.—It is not necessary that the defendant should be either a de jure or de facto trustee, otherwise no suit can be brought under this section in a case in which all trustees are dead or refuse to act (z). Thus a suit may be brought under this section against persons in possession of the trust property who claim adversely to the trust, that is, claim to be the owners of the property (a), or against persons who deny the validity of the trust (b). But a suit against one who is merely a servant for misappropriation of the trust property does not fall under this section (c). See notes, below, "Trustee" and "Suits for possession of trust property."

Order for security for costs against defendant trustee.—Section 10 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, provides that if in any suit instituted under the present section, the Court trying such suit may if, on the application of the plaintiff and after hearing the defendant and making such inquiry as it thinks fit, it is satisfied that such an order is necessary in the public interest, direct the defendant either to furnish security for any expenditure incurred, or likely to be incurred, by the plaintiff in instituting and maintaining such suit, or to deposit from any money in his hands as trustee of the trust to which the suit relates such sum as such Court considers sufficient to meet such expenditure in whole or in part, and that when any money has been so deposited, the Court may make over to the plaintiff the whole or any part of such sum for the conduct of the suit, but that before making over any sum to the plaintiff the Court shall take security from the plaintiff for the refund of the same in the event of such refund being subsequently ordered by the Court.

Clause (a): removing any trustee.—This clause is new. Though this clause did not occur in the corresponding sec. 539 of the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad (i), following an earlier decision of the Madras High Court (e), that a suit for the removal of a trustee of a public trust and for the appointment of a new trustee came under that section, though the removal of a trustee was not one of the reliefs specified in that section. Such a relief, it was said, was either covered by the words "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require" or it was implied in the clause providing for the appointment of new trustees. On the other hand the Madras High Court held in a later case that such a suit did not come under that section (f). Sub sec. (1) cl. (a), of the present section gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions. A suit for the removal of a trustee must therefore be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. The High Court of Madras has held that a suit by the trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment by the Devasthanam Committee of the defendant as a trustee in place of a deceased trustee is invalid and for an injunction to restrain him from interfering with the management of the temple is in effect a suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of trustee, and that it cannot be instituted without the sanction required by this or the next section (g). A similar view has been taken by the Patna High Court (h). This view has been dissented from by the High Court of Bombay on the ground that to bring a suit within this section there must either be an alleged breach of trust or the direction of the Court must be deemed necessary for the administration

Order for security for costs against defendant trustee.—Section 10 of the Charitable and Religious Trusts Act, 1920, provides that if in any suit instituted under the present section, the Court trying such suit may if, on the application of the plaintiff and after hearing the defendant and making such inquiry as it thinks fit, it is satisfied that such an order is necessary in the public interest, direct the defendant either to furnish security for any expenditure incurred, or likely to be incurred, by the plaintiff in instituting and maintaining such suit, or to deposit from any money in his hands as trustee of the trust to which the suit relates such sum as such Court considers sufficient to meet such expenditure in whole or in part, and that when any money has been so deposited, the Court may make over to the plaintiff the whole or any part of such sum for the conduct of the suit, but that before making over any sum to the plaintiff the Court shall take security from the plaintiff for the refund of the same in the event of such refund being subsequently ordered by the Court.

Clause (a): removing any trustee.—This clause is new. Though this clause did not occur in the corresponding sec 539 of the Code of 1882, it was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad (d), following an earlier decision of the Madras High Court (e), that a suit for the removal of a trustee of a public trust and for the appointment of a new trustee came under that section, though the removal of a trustee was not one of the reliefs specified in that section. Such a relief, it was said, was either covered by the words 'such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require,' or it was implied in the clause providing for the appointment of new trustees. On the other hand, the Madras High Court held in a later case that such a suit did not come under that section (f). Sub sec (1), cl (a), of the present section gives effect to the Calcutta, Bombay and Allahabad decisions. A suit for the removal of a trustee must therefore be instituted in conformity with the provisions of this section. The High Court of Madras has held that a suit by the trustees of a temple for a declaration that the appointment by the Devasthanam Committee of the defendant as a trustee in place of a deceased trustee is invalid and for an injunction to restrain him from interfering with the management of the temple is in effect a suit for the removal of the defendant from the office of trustee, and that it cannot be instituted without the sanction required by this or the next section (g). of the trust and that neither of these conditions was present in the Madras case. The Bombay case was similar to the Madras case and it was held that the case did not fall within this section (s). The Madras case though not overruled was dissented from in a later Full Bench case (j) and the Madras High Court has since held that a suit by a trustee to establish his right as hereditary trustee and for consequential relief as the Temple Committee had appointed another person as sole trustee did not fall within the section (l).

In a suit under this section by two trustees of a temple against a co trustee for his removal the Court has the power to investigate charges of misconduct made by the defendant against the plaintiff and even to remove them (l).

In framing a scheme of management under this section [see clause (g)] it is desirable to include a provision for the removal of trustees for breach of trust for where such a provision is included the removal of a defaulting trustee may be obtained by an application in execution of the decree and the costs and trouble of a regular suit which would otherwise be probably necessary may thus be avoided (m). The procedure is necessary to avoid multiplicity of suits (n) though some Madras cases consider such a provision ultra vires (o).

In connection with the removal of a trustee the Bombay High Court has held that mere lax and improvident management on the part of the manager of a shrine fostered by the belief that he was entitled to manage the trust property free from control and very much as if he was its absolute owner is no ground for removing him from the trust (p). In another case the same High Court said that there is no hard and fast rule that because the manager of a shrine has arrogated to himself the position of owner he should be removed from the office of trustee and that each case must be decided with reference to to continue in office if he denies the wakf character of the property and sets up an adverse claim to it (s). A dictum of the Privy Council would suggest that the Bombay decisions are too indulgent. Lord Blanesburgh said that the standard of rectitude and accuracy expected from every trustee of charitable funds is of the highest and that the standard must in all circumstances be maintained by the Courts if the safety of property held upon such trusts is not to be imperilled throughout British India (t).

The Patna High Court removed a Sajjadanashin from the management of a wakf for gross mismanagement but allowed him to retain the spiritual office of Sajjadanashin (u).

Trustee —A person appointed trustee by the Court though his appointment may be impeached as being illegal is a trustee within the meaning of cl (a) and not a trespasser (v). So is a trustee de son tort that is a person who has not been appointed trustee but who takes charge of the trust property and purports to manage it as trust property (w). The Acharya of a temple is a trustee of the property of this section and he may be sued as such (x). (1872) 10 M. L. J. 100.

Clause (b) appointing new trustee.—An application for the appointment of a trustee of a temple on the ground that the defunct trustee is a Hindu, is a suit under this section if the office of trustee is therefore vacant (y). (1872) 10 M. L. J. 100.

Under this section, the Court in an application for the appointment of additional or new trustees through which application is made to the Court with the original constitution of the trust or with the rules of the trust. New trustees appointed under a scheme have the right to sue the defunct trustee.

Clause (d) directing accounts and inquiries. This section is in accordance with the corresponding sec. 539 of the Code of 1882 the High Court has the power to remove the trustees of a public charity, and to compel them to account for the losses sustained by the charity by reason of default on the part of the trustees and for the appointment of new trustees, was a suit within that section. The relief for accounts was not one of the reliefs specifically mentioned in that section. The relief it was said, was covered by the words "further or other relief." (c). The present clause gives legislative recognition to the above decision (d).

Clause (e): apportionment of income.—A suit for a declaration as to what share of the income of a property is due to a particular person is a suit under this section.

Clause (f): authorizing trust property to be let.—An application by a mutawalli for sanction of the Court to grant a lease of the wakf property is not a suit under this section (f).

Clause (g): settling a scheme.—This section vests a very wide discretion in the Court as regards directions to be given for the administration of public trusts. In giving effect to the provisions of the section and in appointing new trustees and settling existing conditions that may have grown up since its foundation (g). The Court may refuse to frame a scheme where no mismanagement is proved (h). The Madras High enforced a scheme by the appointment in execution of a receiver of properties which the scheme had placed under the control of a temple trustee (j).

A scheme framed by the Court may be varied, if good cause is shown (k) But where a scheme is once settled, it precludes a suit to establish a private right to manage the property [e.g., hereditary trusteeship] which, if established, would interfere with the scheme settled by Court (l)

The Court has power under this section to frame a scheme in respect of a public temple though it be under the control of a Temple Committee constituted under the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (m) But where a trust is a private trust, e.g., for a family idol, the settlement of a scheme under this section is inappropriate (n)

In decrees passed under this section liberty is generally reserved to the parties to apply to the Court as occasion arises, as to the effect of such a clause, see the under mentioned case (o) The Madras High Court has held that liberty may be reserved to parties to apply to the Court to fill any vacancy in the office of a trustee appointed under a scheme (p), but the same High Court has also held that liberty to apply for a modification of the scheme or for a relief coming under s. 92 is ultra vires (q), and the Rangoon High Court has followed these decisions (r) But such clauses have appeared in schemes approved by the Privy Council (s), and the Bombay High Court holds that the original consent of the Advocate General is sufficient to give the Court seisin of the case and the Court is competent to entertain applications, for liberty to apply is reserved in order to avoid multiplicity of actions (t)

Where it is quite clear that a public trust has been properly constituted by will, it is not necessary that a suit for the administration of the estate of the testator should precede a suit under this section But it is otherwise where it is doubtful whether there would be funds sufficient for the charitable bequest In the latter case an administration suit may become necessary before any scheme can be framed under this section (u) Where the trust funds are not ascertained and the defendants are accountable for their management of the trust property, the proper course is to take the accounts before a scheme is framed (v)

In a suit brought under this section in respect of a public religious trust, the Court has jurisdiction to frame a scheme regulative of the conduct of the institution as the owners of moneys and property which it possesses, even in cases where the Acharya, as the head of its spiritual and temporal affairs, is worshipped by the members of the sect as the representative of the god In drawing up the scheme, however, the Court must not encroach upon the rights and prerogatives of the Acharya as a religious preceptor of the community, but while the institutional trust must be respected, the sect and body of worshippers for whose benefit it was set up have the protection of the Court against their property being the subject of abuse, speculation and waste (u)

Where provision is made in a scheme for an application being made to the Court for the purposes mentioned in it, and an order is made on the application, the order is not one in execution, and no appeal lies from it (x)

Clause (h), further or other relief—The words "granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require," must be read with what has preceded as referring to further relief to which the party may be entitled which arises out of the existence of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought. Therefore, where the only relief claimed in a suit is for a declaration that certain property is wakf property the suit does not come within the purview of this section. Such a relief does not come within the words "further or other relief" (y). The general clause dealing with "further or other relief" ought to be read with the five preceding specific clauses, and nature of the the reliefs which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the reliefs which may be granted under the preceding clauses. The five specific clauses are not merely illustrative, but furnish an indication of the nature of the relief, which may be granted in a suit under this section" (z).

The question as to the precise scope of clause (h) is of great importance, for if the words "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require" mean relief of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g), a relief in a suit against strangers to a trust for a declaration that property in their possession is trust property, would be outside the scope of this section as it would not be of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g) and the suit could be maintained without the consent of the Advocate General. This very question arose in Abdur Rahim v. Abul Mahomed Barkat Ali (a) where the Privy Council held that a suit for a declaration that property belongs to a wakf can be maintained by Mahomedans interested in the wakf without the consent of the Advocate General. It was argued in that case on behalf of the defendants that the words "further or other relief" must be taken, not in connection with the previous clauses (a) to (g), but in connection with the nature of the suit—namely, any relief other than (a) to (g) that the case of an alleged breach of an express or constructive trust may require in the circumstances of any particular case, and that a breach of trust having been alleged the suit came under this section and it could not be maintained without the consent of the Advocate General. But this argument was not accepted and it was held that the words "further or other relief" in clause (h) must, on general principles, be taken to mean relief of the same nature as clauses (a) to (g), and that as the relief for a declaration that the property belonged to the wakf was not of that nature, the suit was outside the scope of the section. Their Lordships said that the construction suggested on behalf of the defendants would cut down substantive rights which existed before the enactment of the Code of 1908, and a Code regulating procedure should not be construed as having that effect in the absence of express words. Before the enactment of that Code a person interested in a public trust had the right to maintain a suit for such a declaration as the above without the consent of the Advocate General and this is the substantive right referred to above. It follows that when a suit is brought for some of the reliefs mentioned in this section with the consent of the Advocate General, and a prayer for a declaration is afterwards added and strangers to the trust are joined as defendants, the suit ceases to that extent to be one under sec. 92 or of a representative character.

There is a conflict of opinion as to whether a prayer that a deed of trust may be construed by the Court and that the true scope and object of the trust fund may be

- (5) It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the right of a Mahomedan to use a mosque is not a public but a private right. It is like the right to use a private road, any one who has the right may maintain a suit in respect of it [Jauhar v Husain (1885) 7 All 178, at pp 182 183]. To such a suit the provisions of this section do not apply. Thus it has been held that any Mahomedan entitled to frequent a mosque may, if property belonging to the mosque is sold by the manager of the mosque for his private debts maintain a suit for a declaration that the property is wakf property and to set aside the sale and evict the purchaser [Zafaryng Ali v Baktawar Singh (1883) 5 All 497]. Similarly if land attached to a mosque is encroached upon, any Mahomedan entitled to use the mosque may sue to eject the trespasser. And if the mosque be in a dilapidated condition and a Mahomedan frequenting the mosque, or one looking after it is desirous of repairing it, but is obstructed by a third person, he may maintain a suit to establish his right to repair the mosque [Jauhar v Albar Husain (1885) 7 All 178]. The contrary however has been held by the High Court of Calcutta in Jan Ali v Ram Nath (1882) 8 Cal 32 and Lutfunnessa Bibi v Nazirun Bibi (1885) 11 Cal 37. According to these decisions, the right sought to be established in suits such as the above is not a private but a public right, and it can only be enforced by a suit brought in conformity with the provisions of this section. But in a later Calcutta case [Mohiuddin v Sajiduddin (1893) 20 Cal 810] it was pointed out that the reasoning of the Allahabad cases showing that the right of worship of each worshipper in a Mahomedan mosque or religious endowment was an independent right wholly irrespective of the rights of the other worshippers, was correct. The view taken in the earlier Calcutta decisions is it is submitted not correct (f) and it cannot be sustained since the decision of the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v Abu Mahomed Barkat Ali (g)

Suits for a declaration and for possession of trust property against third persons that is strangers to the trust—Suits against strangers to the trust that is, against trespassers and against transferees from trustees for a declaration that property in their hands is trust property and for possession, are outside the scope of this section. This has now been definitely held by the Privy Council in Abdur Rahim v Mahomed Barlat Ali, (1) [see case (1) below] The following are instances of suits of this character —

- (1) A suit for a declaration that property belongs to a wakf can be maintained by Mahomedans interested in the wakf without the sanction of the Advocate General Abdur Rahim v Mahomed Barlat Ali (1928) 55 I A 96, 55 Cal 519, 108 I C 361, (28) A PC 16

But in a case where the plaintiff not only asked for a declaration as against the defendant that a temple was a public trust of a religious nature but also alleged that the defendant was under a contractual obligation to hold the profits of a shop in the temple

premises for the use of the temple and prayed for an account of the profits—the suit was one for directing accounts against a constructive trustee Abdur Rahman's case did not apply and the sanction of the Advocate General was necessary (j) See note “Trustee” above

Suits for removal of trustees for unlawful alienation of trust property and against transferees from those trustees —A common type of suits under this section is a suit against the trustee of a charity for his removal on the ground that he has unlawfully alienated the trust property treating it as his private property, and for the appointment of a new trustee in his place. It is clear that such a suit is within this section for the relief claimed is one under cl (a) of this section and the ground on which the relief is claimed is a breach of trust in alienating the property. It is also clear that the Court cannot remove the trustee unless it finds that the property is trust property and that it has been wrongfully alienated by the trustee. The question to be considered is whether the Court has power, in the absence of the alienee, to declare that the property is trust property and that the alienation is unlawful. It has been held by the High Court of Madras that an alienee is not a proper party to a suit under this section, and that if he is joined as a party, the suit as against him should be dismissed. But this, it has been held, does not preclude the Court from determining in a suit against the trustee alone whether the property is trust property, and declaring, if it is so found, that it is trust property. But the transferee, not being a party to the suit, is not bound by the declaration and if a suit is subsequently brought against him for possession of the property, it is open to him to contend that the property is not trust property (l). A similar view has been taken by the High Court of Calcutta (l). On the other hand it has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that the alienee though not a necessary party to the suit (m) is a proper party (n), and that if he is joined as a party, and the Court declares that the property is trust property he will be bound by such declaration in a subsequent suit for possession against him (o). The High Court of Bombay has gone further and held that the transferee is not only a proper but a necessary party and that no such declaration can be made in his absence (p). But all the High Courts are agreed that in a suit such as the above a decree cannot be passed against the alienee directing him to deliver possession of the property to the plaintiffs though he is a party to the suit as such relief is neither specifically mentioned in the section nor implied in cl (h) and that the remedy of the newly appointed trustee is to institute a separate suit for possession against him (q). The proposition that the Court has no power under this section to pass a decree against an alienee directing him to deliver possession to the plaintiffs is in accordance with a recent ruling of the Privy Council where it was held that a relief or a remedy against third persons that is strangers to the trust, was not within the scope of this section (r). It is submitted that the Court has also no power under this section to make a declaration that the property in suit is not trust property so as to bind the alienee, such a relief also being outside the scope of the section. The Rangoon High Court, however, has gone further and holds that if in a suit under sec 92 a claim to relief against alienees who are strangers to the trust is added, there is a misjoinder both of parties and causes of action and that unless the plaint is amended the suit cannot be entertained. In such a suit, praying (1) for the removal of a trustee, (2) for the vesting of the property in new trustees, and (3) for a declaration that a mortgage of the property by the trustee was invalid—the first two reliefs were granted but the suit as against the mortgagee was dismissed (s)

Suits only for a declaration of trust.—This section presupposes the existence of a trust for the administration of which it is necessary to make provision. Hence it does not apply to a suit brought solely for the purpose of having a declaration of the Court that certain property is wakf, the fact of endowment being denied on the other side (t). Nor does this section apply to a suit brought merely for a declaration that the plaintiffs are trustees of an endowment (u). See note above, "Suits for a declaration and for possession of trust property against third persons, i.e., strangers to the trust."

Suits for a declaration that the defendant is not a properly appointed trustee and for an injunction against him.—See note above, "Clause (a). removing any trustee."

Courts competent to try suits under this section.—A suit under this section must be instituted either in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government. But this does not empower the Local Government to direct the transfer of a particular suit pending in a District Court to a particular Judge. The authority must be a general one to try suits under this section (v).

The expression "principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction" in this section does not include the Court of an Additional District Judge appointed under sec 8 of the Civil Courts Act XII of 1887 (u) unless the District Judge has under sub sec (2) of that section assigned to him the functions of a District Judge relating to all suits cognizable by the District Judge (x).

Where a suit is brought against an executor in the Court of a Subordinate Judge for the administration of the testator's estate, the mere fact, that the will contains directions for applying portions of the estate to charitable purposes does not bring the suit within this section. The Subordinate Judge has jurisdiction to entertain such a suit, but if any questions relating to charitable bequests arise before him and a scheme has to be framed under this section, he should hold the amount appropriated for charities in the possession of a Receiver until the Advocate General or the Collector obtains the directions of the District Court (y).

Where some of the reliefs are outside the scope of the section.—When some of the reliefs claimed are outside the scope of the section, the Court is not justified in returning the plaint. It should require the plaintiff to amend his plaint by confining himself to reliefs within the section, or it might wait till it came to pronounce judgment and dismiss the suit as to reliefs without the section (z). So in a suit by worshippers for the appointment of trustees and for the ejectment of trespassers the Court may appoint trustees without passing a decree in ejectment (a) But worshippers cannot sue under O 1, r 8, to recover the property unless they are supported by the trustees They should sue to remove the trustees first and then let the new trustees sue in ejectment (f) When a trustee dies the party entitled to succeed to the management may sue to establish his right The section does not apply to such a suit and if objection is raised to his appointment on the ground of misconduct the objector should be referred to a suit under sec 92 (c)

Sub section (2) this section is mandatory—The Legislature has by enacting this section constituted a special tribunal for the trial of a class of suits which it has removed from the cognizance of the ordinary Courts Those are suits for any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) in cases where there is an alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust This class of suits can only be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in this section, and they can only be brought either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the consent in writing of the Advocate General This is enacted by sub sec (2) of the present section Under the corresponding section 539 of the Codes of 1877 and 1882 it was doubtful whether every suit of the character described above was to be instituted in the manner aforesaid Sub sec (2) makes it clear that every such suit must be so instituted, it enacts that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) shall be instituted without the consent of the Advocate General (d) But sub sec (2) must be read with sub sec (1) Reading sub sec. (2) with sub sec (1) it follows that it is not every suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub sec (1) that should be brought with the consent of the Advocate General but those suits only which besides claiming any of those reliefs are brought by individuals as representatives of the general public Accordingly a Full Bench of the Madras High Court has held that a suit by a trustee of a public religious trust against a co trustee for accounts does not fall within this section, though the relief claimed is the one specified in sub sec (1) cl (d) Such a suit is not a representative suit The relief is sought not in the larger interest of the public but merely for the purpose of vindicating the private rights of one of the trustees and of enabling him to discharge the duties and liabilities which are imposed upon him by the trust (e) When a trustee sued his two co trustees for the settlement of a scheme of management by rotation the Court said that if the suit was brought on the basis of an agreement between the trustees or on the terms of the will of the founder of the trust it would be a suit to assert a private right and sec 92 would not apply but as there was no such agreement or will the learned Judge held that the suit was a representative suit and that sec 92 did apply (f)

The doubt referred to in the preceding paragraph arose in the following way The Code of 1859 did not contain any special provisions for the institution of suits relating to public charities Such provisions were introduced for the first time by sec 539 of the Code of 1877 They were reproduced in sec 539 of the Code of 1882 and they now find a place in sub sec (1) of the present section But neither the Code of 1877 nor the Code of 1882 contained any provision corresponding to sub sec (2) Before the enactment of the Code of 1877 suits relating to public charitable or religious trusts could be instituted in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs Thus—

- (1) persons appointed supervisors over trustees could sue in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit for the removal of the trustees for malversation and to obtain the appointment in their place of other fit and proper persons (g) similarly
- (2) one or more of the members of a defined class of the general public [such as the Satchasi community of Chatra] could sue on behalf of the whole class, with the leave of the Court under sec 30 [now O 1, r 8], in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit, to obtain a declaration of their right to take part in the management of the worship of a goddess (h)

It is obvious that the above suits fall within the purview of the present section. They also came within the terms of sec 539 of the earlier Codes. In the absence of any provision in sec 539 similar to that contained in sub sec (2), the question arose whether these suits were to be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in sec 539 and by the Advocate General as plaintiff, or whether they could be instituted as before in ordinary Courts and by persons who could have sued if sec 539 had not been enacted. The High Court of Bombay held that s 539 was mandatory, in other words, that every suit of the character mentioned in that section must be brought in accordance with its provisions, and not otherwise. Therefore the suits referred to above could not be brought by the supervisors as plaintiffs in the one case and by the members of the community in the other, but they had to be instituted either by the Advocate General or by two or more persons interested in the trust after obtaining the sanction of the Advocate General, and further, these suits could only be brought in the special Courts indicated in that section, namely the High Court or the District Court, as the case might be (i). On the other hand, the other High Courts held that section 539 was permissive and that it did not take away the right of suit which existed prior to and independently of it. According to the latter view suits of the character mentioned above could, notwithstanding the enactment of section 539 be brought as before by the abovenamed parties as plaintiffs in any Court competent to entertain those suits, and it was not obligatory to institute them in accordance with the provisions of sec 539 (j). Sub section (2) gives effect to the Bombay decisions and supersedes the decisions of the other High Courts. It provides in distinct terms that no suit claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) shall be instituted except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section. At the same time it declares that the special provisions of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 for the institution of suits governed by that Act are not affected by the provisions of this section. The provisions of that Act and their bearing on the present section are discussed in the next paragraph.

“Save as provided by the Religious Endowments Act 1863”—After the downfall of the Mogul Empire in India, it was discovered that the income of many endowments granted in land “by the presiding Governments of this country and by individuals for the support of mosques temples colleges and for other pious and beneficial purposes” was misappropriated by persons managing the endowments. It was therefore deemed expedient that the British Government should take charge of these endowments, and for that purpose and the purpose also of providing for the maintenance of bridges, serais, uttaras and other buildings erected for the use of the public, Regulation 19 of 1810 was passed, whereby the general superintendence of all the religious and charitable endowments referred to above was vested in the Board of Revenue. That Regulation applied to endowments in Bengal. A similar Regulation, Regulation 7 of 1817, was subsequently passed to provide for like endowments in the Madras Presidency (l). Several years after the passing of these Regulations, it was thought that the connection of a Christian Government with the religious establishments of Hindus and Mahomedans was inexpedient, and a report was therefore called for by the Government of India in the year 1811 from the Collectors of all Districts with a view to divest themselves of the management of religious endowments, and transfer the management to properly qualified individuals. As a result, Act 20 of 1863 was passed, whereby such of the provisions of the abovementioned Regulations as related to religious endowments were repealed, and provision was made for the transfer of all such endowments, in certain cases to trustees, and in others to committees (ss 3-8). But the duty of superintending charitable endowments imposed on the Board of Revenue by the old Regulations is still retained, and, in fact, express care is taken in the Act to declare that this duty as to charitable endowments is not intended to be affected or interfered with (ss 21, 23).

The Religious Endowments Act applies only to public religious endowments, as did the old Regulations. It does not apply to private religious endowments. Sec 14 of the Act provides that any person interested in any mosque, temple or religious establishment may sue the trustees or members of a committee for any misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty committed by them in respect of the trust vested in them, and the Court may in such suit direct the specific performance of any act by them, and may decree damages and costs against them, and may also direct the removal of any of the trustees or any member of a committee. A suit which does not charge the trustees or members of a committee with misfeasance, breach of trust, or neglect of duty, does not fall under that section (l). Sec 18 provides that no suit under the Act shall be instituted without the leave of the Court.

The Act is in force in all Presidencies except the Presidency of Bombay where it is in force in North Canara only. But it does not apply to presidency towns, so that a suit instituted in a Chartered High Court in the exercise of its ordinary original jurisdiction inherited from the Supreme Court charging neglect of duty on the part of a temple trustee does not require the leave of the Court under sec 18 of the Act (m).

After the passing of the Regulations above referred to, the Board of Revenue took over the management of some endowments, but in the large majority of cases they did not take charge of endowments created by private individuals. The operation of the Act, however, is not confined to such endowments as had actually been taken under the management of the Board of Revenue under the old Regulations. The Act applies to every public religious endowment to which the provisions of the old Regulations applied, that is to say, to every public religious endowment created "by the preceding Governments of this country and by individuals," whether the management of the endowment was taken over by the Board of Revenue or not (n).

Reading sec 92 of the Code and the Religious Endowments Act together we had the following result —

- (1) No suit in respect of charitable endowments of a public nature, claiming any of the reliefs specified in sub section (1) of section 92, can be brought except in conformity with the provisions of that sub section.

the Code of 1877 suits relating to public charitable or religious trusts could be instituted in the ordinary Courts by certain persons as plaintiffs Thus—

- (1) persons appointed supervisors over trustees could sue in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit for the removal of the trustees for malversation and to obtain the appointment in their place of other fit and proper persons (g) similarly
- (2) one or more of the members of a defined class of the general public [such as the Satchasi community of Chatra] could sue on behalf of the whole class, with the leave of the Court under sec 30 [now O I, r 8], in any ordinary Court competent to hear the suit, to obtain a declaration of their right to take part in the management of the worship of a goddess (A)

It is obvious that the above suits fall within the purview of the present section. They also came within the terms of sec 539 of the earlier Codes. In the absence of any provision in sec 539 similar to that contained in sub sec (2), the question arose whether these suits were to be instituted in the special Courts mentioned in sec 539 and by the Advocate General as plaintiff, or whether they could be instituted as before in ordinary Courts and by persons who could have sued if sec 539 had not been enacted. Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Act Mad. Act 2 of 1927—This Act (p) repeals the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, and Madras Regulation 1 of 1817 so far as they apply to the more important Hindu public religious endowments in the Presidency of Madras except the Presidency town. It makes provision for the better administration of such endowments by Temple Committees and by a Board of Commissioners. Section 73 of the Act provides that secs. 92 and 93 and O. 1, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code shall not apply to any suit claiming relief in respect of the administration or management of such a religious endowment. Such suits can only be brought by the Board or Temple Committee or by an interested person with the consent of the Board or Committee. If an endowment is partly secular and partly religious the Board is empowered to make an allocation and declare what part is secular and what part is religious. After such allocation the religious portion is subject to the provisions of the Act. But if such allocation has not been made, a suit for removing a trustee of an endowment partly secular and partly religious is within sec. 92 (q).

Death of a plaintiff pending suit—It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that where a suit is brought by two persons under this section, and one of them dies pending the suit, the suit abates unless some other person is brought on the record in place of the deceased. Such person must be one who has an interest in the trust, and he must have obtained the consent of the Advocate General as required by this section (r). On the other hand, the High Court of Madras has held that a suit brought under this section being a representative suit, no question of abatement can arise, and the Court has power under O. 1, r. 10 (2), to add other persons interested in the trust as parties not because they are the legal representatives of the deceased plaintiff, but because they had become parties to the representatives' suit by the very fact of its having been instituted on behalf of all persons interested in the trust, and that the consent of the Advocate General to such addition is not necessary (s). The Madras decisions have been followed in Lahore (t) and Rangoon (u). The Allahabad colluding with the defendant, other persons interested may apply to the Court to be brought on the record under O 1, r 10 in order to apply for an amendment of the scheme (w).

Death of defendant trustee pending suit.—Where a suit is brought under this section against a trustee not only for his removal but for framing a scheme and the scheme is one of the main reliefs sought, the suit does not abate on the death of the trustee, and his successor in office may be brought on the record as a party defendant (x). The suit, of course, would abate, if it was solely for the removal of the trustee.

Specific Relief Act, 1877, s. 42.—Where a suit falls within this section the Plaintiffs cannot evade the requirements of the Code by framing the suit as one under sec 42 of the Specific Relief Act (y). At the same time where the suit is one maintainable under this section, and the plaintiff seeks any of the reliefs specified in the section sec 42 of the Specific Relief Act does not apply. Thus if a suit is brought under this section for a declaration that the defendants are not the lawful trustees and for the appointment of new trustees, the suit will not be dismissed because consequential relief such as delivery of the trust property to the new trustees is not claimed (z). [Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act provides in effect that where a suit is brought for a declaratory decree, and the plaintiff is able to seek further relief than a mere declaration, but omits to do so, the suit should be dismissed.]

Dismissal of suit by trustees no bar to suit by Advocate General. The fact that de jure managers and trustees of a public charity have been held in a previous suit to have lost their right by limitation to oust de facto trustees, does not confer on the latter immunity from suit on the part of the Advocate General under this section (a).

Limitation—Accounts against trustee de son tort.—A suit for account under this section against a trustee de son tort is governed not by sec 10 of the Limitation Act, but by art 120 of the Limitation Act. Such a trustee is only liable to render accounts for 6 years preceding the suit (b).

Relators cannot appeal in their own right.—Where a suit instituted under this section by the Advocate General at the instance of relators is dismissed, and the Advocate General does not think fit to appeal, the relators are not competent to file an appeal on their own account against the decree dismissing the suit (c). The reason is that relators are not parties to the suit (d).

Cy pres doctrine.—Though the section does not expressly empower the Court to apply the cy pres doctrine in the settling of schemes, it would seem that the Court has the power to apply the doctrine (e). But it has no jurisdiction to apply the cy pres doctrine extra territorium (f).

Appeal.—An order refusing to join persons as defendants in a suit under sec 42 is a judgment within the meaning of cl 15 of the Letters Patent and is appealable as such (g).

93. [S. 539, last para.] The powers conferred by sections 91 and 92 on the Advocate-General may, outside the Presidency-towns, be, with the previous sanction of the Local Government, exercised also by the Collector or by such officer as the Local Government may appoint in this behalf.

Exercise of powers of Advocate General outside Presidency towns

Previous sanction of the Local Government.—The Privy Council have held that the previous sanction of the Local Government is necessary whether the suit is instituted by the Collector, or by an officer appointed by the Local Government or whether the suit is instituted by two or more persons with the consent in writing of such Collector or officer (A) The effect of this decision is that the Collector or other officer appointed must in every case obtain the sanction of the Local Government before instituting a suit or giving his consent to the institution of a suit The previous practice of Local Governments had been to give previous sanction generally and not in respect of each particular case and therefore the Public Suits Validation Act, 1932 (11 of 1932) was passed to validate pending suits filed under the previous practice The Act also provides for the restoration of suits and appeals dismissed after the 30th November 1931 (the date of the Privy Council decision) for want of sanction of the Local Government, on application made within six months of the commencement of the Act, i.e., the 8th April 1932 In the case of suits already filed under the previous practice, it is not necessary to obtain the sanction of the Local Government (A1)

Collector.—The fact that the Legal Remembrancer is in a particular province invested as a rule with the duties elsewhere discharged by the Advocate General is no reason why in a particular case the Local Government may not appoint the Collector or any other officer to prosecute it (1) Before the Privy Council decision requiring sanction of the Local Government in each case, it was held that an Assistant Collector had no power to give his consent to the institution of a suit and that if a suit is filed with his consent but not that of the Collector the plaint must be rejected (2)

Visitatorial power of Collector.—Formally the Collector had a visitatorial power enabling him to enforce an honest and proper administration of religious endowments The connection of the Government in its executive capacity with Hindu and Mahomedan foundations was brought to an end for Bombay by Bombay Act 7 of 1863 and for Bengal and Madras by Act 20 of 1863 (3)

Collector's refusal to sanction proceeding.—The Advocate General, it seems, may give his consent to a suit to be instituted outside the Presidency towns though the Collector may have refused to give his consent under this section (4)

- (d) appoint a receiver of any property and enforce the performance of his duties by attaching and selling his property ,
- (e) make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient

This section summarizes the general powers of the Court in regard to interlocutory proceedings The details of procedure have been relegated to Schedule I

Undertaking.—Where a temporary injunction has been granted on an undertaking by the plaintiff to compensate the defendant for any loss that may arise by reason of the injunction, the undertaking is enforced by an application under this section to the Court which granted the injunction A attaches a house in execution of a decree against B C sues for a declaration that the house belongs to him, and obtains a temporary injunction staying the sale on his undertaking to pay interest to A at 6 per centum on the value of the house if his suit be dismissed C's suit is dismissed In such a case the procedure to be adopted by A to recover the interest from C is to apply not to the Court executing the decree, but to the Court which granted the injunction (z)

Chartered High Court.—Where a temporary injunction was granted by the High Court of Bombay on an undertaking by the plaintiff under Rule 347 of that Court to pay such sum by way of damages as the Court may award as compensation in the event of a party affected sustaining prejudice by such order, it was held that the Court had power under that rule to award compensation to the defendant exceeding Rs 1,000 on an application by the defendant in that behalf (a)

Appeals.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

96 [S. 540 Jud Act, 1873. s 49] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties

Changes introduced by the section—Sub section (3) is new In other respects this section corresponds with sec 540 of the Code of 1882 As to the effect of sub section (3) see notes below under the head Sub section (3) consent decrees not appealable

Compare Judicature Act 1873 s 49 which provides that no order made by the High Court of justice or any Judge thereof by the consent of parties shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or Judge making such order

Letters Patent appeals—The right of appeal from a decree of a single Judge of a High Court to the High Court is governed not by this section but cl 15 of the Letters Patent The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say from a single Judge of the High Court This right of appeal depends on clause 15 of the Charter (b) But as regards procedure the Court and the rules therein contained especially the rules contained in O 41, apply to proceedings in a High Court under the Letters Patent save so far as the Code expressly provides to the contrary (c)

Right of appeal—It is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Court, such right must be given by statute or by some authority equivalent to a statute (d) Unless a right of appeal is clearly given by Statute it does not exist whereas a litigant has independently of any Statute a right to institute any suit of a civil nature in some Court or another (e)

PART VII.

Appeals.

APPEALS FROM ORIGINAL DECREES.

96. [S. 540 Jud. Act, 1873. s. 49] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court.

(2) An appeal may lie from an original decree passed ex parte.

(3) No appeal shall lie from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Changes introduced by the section.—Sub section (3) is new In other respects this section corresponds with sec 540 of the Code of 1882 As to the effect of sub section (3), see notes below under the head Sub section (3) consent decrees not appealable "

Compare Judicature Act, 1873, s 49, which provides that "no order made by the High Court of justice or any Judge thereof, by the consent of parties, shall be subject to any appeal except by leave of the Court or Judge making such order "

Letters Patent appeals—The right of appeal from a decree of a single Judge of a High Court to the High Court is governed not by this section, but cl 15 of the Letters Patent "The Code makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court, that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court This right of appeal depends on clause 15 of the Charter (b) But as regards procedure, the Court and the rules therein contained, especially the rules contained in O 41, apply to proceedings in a High Court under the Letters Patent, save so far as the Code expressly provides to the contrary (c)

Right of appeal—It is not to be assumed that there is a right of appeal in every matter which comes under the consideration of a Court, such right must be given by statute or by some authority equivalent to a statute (d) Unless a right of appeal is clearly given by Statute, it does not exist, whereas a litigant has independently of any Statute a right to institute any suit of a civil nature in some Court or another (e)

No right of appeal can be given except by express words (f) This section in express words gives a right of appeal from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorised to hear appeals from the decision of such Court But the Court of a special judicial officer appointed under sec 3 (d) of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is a Court of special jurisdiction and the High Court is not authorised to hear appeals from it (g) Rights of appeal again are substantive rights. They are not mere matters of procedure Hence an Act which takes away an existing right of appeal must not be applied retrospectively in the absence of express enactment or necessary intendment (h)

Agreement not to appeal.—An agreement whereby the parties agree not to appeal from a decree, the parties thereto, if it is for a lawful consideration, is an agreement by the next friend of a minor not to

Decree—As to the distinction between a decree and an order, see p 5 above All decrees are appealable unless the appeal is barred under this Code or any other law But all orders are not appealable The only orders appealable are those specified in sec 104 An order determining the apportionment of compensation awarded under the Land Acquisition Act 1894, is a decree and appealable (i)

Where decree not drawn up—No appeal can be entertained from a decree unless the decree has been drawn up (l) See notes to sec 33, also notes to sec 97,

Where preliminary decree not drawn up

Appeal from ex parte decree—Sec 540 of the Code of 1882 as it originally stood did not contain any clause allowing appeals from ex parte decrees The clause allowing such appeals was added by sec 45 of the Civil Procedure Code Amending Act 7 of 1888 Prior to that Act it was doubted in some cases whether an appeal lay from an ex parte decree As to the powers of an appellate Court in the matter of ex parte decrees, see notes to O 9, r 13, "Whether remedies concurrent"

Forum of appeal.—The value of a suit, that is, the amount or value of the subject matter thereof, determines the forum of suit that is the Court in which the suit is to be filed. It also determines the forum of appeal, that is, the Court to which the appeal lies What then is the value of a suit for the purposes of appeal? Now a plaintiff may in his plaint fix a sum definitively as the amount of his claim as in a suit for debt, or he may fix it approximately or tentatively as in a suit for accounts or for mesne profits [O 7, r 2] Where the plaintiff fixes a sum definitively it is that sum which determines the forum of appeal, and not the amount awarded by the decree and involved in the appeal Where the plaintiff fixes a sum approximately, there is a difference of opinion as to the forum of appeal According to the Calcutta High Court, it is the amount decreed by the first Court as the amount due to the plaintiff which determines the forum of appeal

High Courts it is the amount determined by the first Court as the amount of the plaintiff and accepted by the plaintiff by payment of the amount of the determination the form of appeal. According to the Madras High Court it is the amount or value of the subject matter as fixed in the plaint that determines the Court to which the appeal lies and not the amount decreed. It has accordingly been held by that Court that where in a suit for accounts filed in the Court of a District Munsif whose jurisdiction is limited to suits of value the value does not exceed Rs. 200 the plaintiff fixes his claim approximately at Rs. 2000 and the Munsif passes a decree for more than Rs. 1000 the appeal from the Munsif's decree lies not to the High Court but to the District Court (f). In a case (g) the Allahabad High Court has adopted the same rule as Madras. Where a suit is dismissed by the first Court in which case the mesne profits remain undetermined the sum stated in the plaint determines the form of appeal (r). The Allahabad High Court of Calcutta has recently held that where a suit is properly brought in the Court of a Munsif for recovery of possession of land and mesne profits and a decree is claimed or a decree is passed at a sum beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Munsif the Munsif has jurisdiction to fix such mesne profits and pass a decree for a sum beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. The value of such a suit for purposes of jurisdiction is the value of the immovable property plus mesne profits up to the date of the suit where such profits are claimed. If a suit is rightly entertained as within the jurisdiction of the Munsif a decree passed has power to grant the proper and adequate relief is not affected by any event which increases the value of the relief during the pendency of the suit. The result of appeal is determined by the value of the suit and not by the amount decreed (s). The undermentioned decisions (t) of the same High Court must be taken to have been overruled by the Full Bench case. See notes to s 6 on p 91 above.

A decree is passed by Court M in respect of a cause of action which arises at Kailash. Appeals from decrees of Court M lie to Court C. Subsequently Kailash is transferred to the territorial jurisdiction of Court P from which appeals lie to Court B. To which Court does the appeal from the decree lie to Court C or to Court B? The answer lies to Court B because a transfer of territorial jurisdiction operates to effect a transfer of venue (u).

Who may appeal—An appeal under this section may be preferred by any of the following persons—

- 1 Any party to the suit adversely affected by the decree (v) or if such party is dead by his legal representative (w) [see s 146]
- 2 Any transferee of the interest of such party who so far as such interest is concerned is bound by the decree provided his name is entered on the record of the suit (x) [See note to s 47 Representative on p 174 above]
- 3 An auction purchaser may appeal from an order in execution setting aside the sale on the ground of fraud [See notes to s 47 Appeal on p 185 above]

No person unless he is party to the suit is entitled to appeal under this section (y)

We have said above that any party to a suit adversely affected by a decree may prefer an appeal from the decree. The question whether a party is adversely affected by a decree is a question of fact to be determined in each case according to its particular circumstances. It is clear that if a plaintiff's claim is decreed in its entirety and

The reason is that the very fact that the decree is entirely in the plaintiff's favour notwithstanding a finding adverse to him on one of the issues shows that such finding was unnecessary to the determination of the plaintiff's suit. It has been stated in the notes to s 11, pp 79-80 above, that when a finding on an issue is not necessary to the determination of a suit, such finding does not operate as res judicata, and it is an elementary principle that an appeal is not admissible on any point that does not operate as res judicata. Similarly, if a suit is brought by A against B, and the suit is dismissed in its entirety B cannot appeal from the decree. And even if one of the issues is found against B B cannot appeal from the finding, for such finding does not operate as res judicata for the reason stated above (a). See notes to s 11, "Decision in the former suit must have been necessary to the determination of that suit," on p 80 above, and the cases there cited.

It sometimes happens where there are two or more defendants, that although a suit is dismissed as against one of them in other words, the decree on the face of it is entirely in his favour, the decree impliedly negatives the right claimed by such defendant as against the plaintiff and the other defendants. In such a case it has been held that an appeal lies at the instance of such defendant on the ground that he is adversely affected by the decree. X owes Rs 2,000 to A. A assigns the debt first to B and then to C. C sues A and B to recover the debt, alleging that the assignment to B had become void through non fulfilment of the conditions upon which it was made. A decree is passed against A, but the suit is dismissed as against B. Here the decree necessarily implies the finding that the assignment to B had become void, inasmuch as but for such a finding the decree could not have been passed in favour of C who admittedly was the second assignee of the debt. B may therefore appeal from the decree, though as against him the suit was dismissed (b).

In some cases an appeal may be preferred by a defendant against his co-defendants. A sues two Hindu brothers B and C on a promissory note passed by B for money borrowed by him (B) as manager of the family, alleging that B and C were joint, and that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes. B does not appear at the hearing. C appears and admits that he and B are joint, but denies that the loan was obtained for family purposes. An issue is raised as to whether the debt contracted by B was for family purposes. It is found by the Court that the loan was obtained by B for family purposes, and a decree is passed against B and C. Here C can appeal from the decree as between himself and B. The rule is that when a Court deals with a case as raising not only a question between the plaintiff and the defendants but also as between the defendants one of the defendants can appeal from the decree as between himself and the other defendants (c). See notes to s 11, "Res judicata between co-defendants" on p 63 above.

Decree holder may accept what the decree awards him and appeal for what the decree refuses him — If the decree awards the decree holder a sum smaller than what he claims he may accept the smaller sum and appeal for the balance. He may approve the decree as to what it awards him and reprobate the decree as to what it refuses him (d)

Joinder of appellants — It is irregular for defendants with different defences to a suit and with different grounds for appeal to join in a single appeal (e)

Sub section (3), consent decrees not appealable — Sub section (3) is new. It declares that no decree passed by consent of parties shall be appealable. Under the Code of 1882 consent decrees were passed under sec 375. Under the present Code (f) a consent decree may be passed under O 23, r 3. This rule corresponds with sec 375 of the Code of 1882 except that certain words which occurred at the end of sec 375 have now been omitted. Sec 375 ran as follows —

If a suit be adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or if the defendant satisfy the plaintiff in respect to the whole or any part of the matter of the suit such agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be recorded, and the Court shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit, and such decree shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject matter of the suit as is dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction

O 23, r 3, is a reproduction of sec 375 with the omission of the words italicized above (g). This omission has been supplied by sub section (3) of the present section. The said words barred an appeal from a consent decree only so far as such decree related to so much of the subject matter of the suit as was dealt with by the agreement, compromise or satisfaction on which the decree was based. If a consent decree dealt with any matter extraneous to the suit that is matters that did not relate to the subject matter of the suit it was held that the decree though passed with the consent of parties was appealable and that it should be modified by omitting such terms as did not relate to the subject matter of the suit (h). As regards the terms so excluded it was held that they might be enforced in a separate suit as a contract (i). It would be so also under the present Code. See in this connection the observations of the Judicial Committee in Hemanta Kumari Devi v Midnapur Zemindari Company (j).

Both under O 23 r 3 and the corresponding sec 375 of the Code of 1882 the agreement or compromise in terms of which the Court is invited to pass a consent decree must be lawful. It was accordingly observed by the High Court of Bombay in Goculdas v James Scott (k) a case under sec 375 that notwithstanding the declared finality of the decree an appeal against it would be maintainable where the party against whom the decree was passed alleged that there had been in fact no 'lawful agreement' come to in which case the condition precedent to the making of the decree would not be fulfilled. These observations were mere obiter dicta, but they were adopted by the High Court of Madras in Sridharan v Puramathian (l) where it was held that an appeal would lie from a consent decree if the agreement in terms of which the decree was passed was not lawful. The present Code does not allow an appeal from a consent decree in any case. But it is competent to either party to appeal from the order recording the compromise where the compromise is not a lawful compromise on the ground that the Court had no power under O 23 r 3 to record a compromise that was not lawful [O 43 r 1 cl (m)]. See notes to O 22 r 3, Appeal.

Plaintiff sued upon an account stated. The Court found that the account stated was a deliberate fabrication and fraud and the plaintiff had to fall back on items in the general account. Each of these was found to be barred by limitation but defendants consented to a decree for such items as plaintiff could prove. A decree was passed on this footing. The Privy Council held that it was a consent decree and not appealable and that if it were not a consent decree the plaintiff's claim would have to be dismissed (m).

Practice.—The Privy Council have said that when a decree or any part of a decree is passed by consent of parties it should always so appear on the face of the decree when drawn up (n).

Procedure for setting aside consent decrees.—Sub-section (3) in so far as it bars an appeal from consent decrees gives effect to the principle that a judgment by consent acts as an estoppel (o). In the case of a consent decree the Privy Council refused to entertain an appeal or to consider the sufficiency or otherwise of the consent as the decree could only be set aside by substantive proceedings appropriate to that particular remedy (p). A consent decree can be set aside on any ground which would invalidate an agreement such as misrepresentation, fraud or mistake (q). This can only be done by a suit and a consent decree cannot be set aside by an appeal (r) or a review (s) or by a rule obtained on a motion (t). But the Court in its inherent jurisdiction may set aside an interlocutory consent order which is not a final order or judgment (u). But an appeal from an order recording a compromise under O 23 r 3 is not incompetent if the decree is passed before the appeal (v). In some cases it may be done by an application for a review (w). But it cannot be done by a rule (x). See notes to sec 11. Consent decree and estoppel.

By consent of parties.—To constitute consent there must be an agreement between the parties. Mere acceptance by a party of an order offered by the Court does not amount to consent (y).

97. [New] Where any party aggrieved by a preliminary decree passed after the commencement of this Code does not appeal from such decree, he shall be precluded from disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree.

Preliminary decree—For definition of preliminary decree, see sec 2 (2) above Appeal from preliminary decree.—This section is new. The object of the section is to estop parties aggrieved by a preliminary decree who do not appeal from such decree within the period of limitation, from afterwards disputing its correctness in any appeal which may be preferred from the final decree.

This section has expressly excepted preliminary decrees from the position assigned to interlocutory orders, precluding an appellant from impeaching them in the course of an attack upon the final decree. This is because the final decree is in its nature dependent and subordinate, as it is a decree which has been passed as a result of proceedings directed and controlled by the preliminary decree and based thereon (a).

The Calcutta decisions under the Code of 1852 are now obsolete. The general trend of these decisions was in the opposite direction. According to these decisions, a party aggrieved by an order in the nature of preliminary decree was not bound to appeal from the order, though the order was appealable as a decree, he was at liberty to wait until the final decree was passed, and then to dispute the correctness of the order in an appeal from the final decree, though the period of limitation for an appeal from the order had then expired. Thus it was held that when an order was passed in a suit for dissolution of partnership and accounts, declaring the shares of the parties, and referring the case to a commissioner for taking accounts, it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order, and the period prescribed by the law of limitation for appealing from the order had then expired (b). In a subsequent case it was held by a Full Bench of that Court in Khalem Hossein v Emlad Hossein (c) [Maclean, C J, and Rampini, J, dissenting], that where an order was passed in a suit for partition declaring the rights of the parties (d), it was open to the party aggrieved by the order to dispute its correctness in an appeal from the final decree, though no appeal was preferred from the order within the time allowed by law. The contrary had been laid down in an earlier case decided by the same High Court (e) but that decision was dissented from by a majority of the Full Bench in Ahadem Hossein & case. Under this section omission to prefer an appeal from a preliminary decree precludes objections to it in an appeal from the final decree (f). It is to be noted that the present section applies only to preliminary decrees passed after the commencement of this Code. For preliminary decrees, see O 20 below.

Where preliminary decree not drawn up—A right of appeal under this section only arises when a preliminary decree is passed that is, drawn up. It is the duty of the Court, and not of the parties, to see that a decree is drawn up. Unless a preliminary decree is drawn up, this section does not therefore apply. See sec 33, and notes thereon.

Two preliminary decrees—The Code, it seems, contemplates only one preliminary decree (h). The High Court of Calcutta, however, has held that there may in an exceptional case be more than one preliminary decree (i).

Final decree passed prior to or during pendency of appeal from preliminary decree—A Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court after an exhaustive review of the case law has held that an appeal from a preliminary decree is not incompetent if the final decree is passed before it is presented, and that in such a case it is not necessary for the party aggrieved by the preliminary decree to appeal against the final decree, if the final decree, apart from being based on the preliminary decree is otherwise correct (j) Rankin, C J, said that the function of the final decree is merely to restate and apply with precision what the preliminary decree has ordained, that the decrees being in the same suit the Court in appeal from the preliminary decree as it has power to reverse or vary the preliminary decree, has also power to affect the final decree, that as the right of appeal from the preliminary decree is given without any qualification the passing of a final decree is no bar to the institution or hearing of any appeal against the preliminary decree, that if the preliminary decree is set aside the final decree is superseded whether the appeal was brought before or after the passing of the final decree and that the Court when setting aside or varying the preliminary decree can and should give directions for setting aside or varying the final decree if the existence of the final decree is brought to its notice as in all cases it should be

This illuminating judgment has the effect of overruling previous Calcutta decisions which had held that after the final decree an appeal from the preliminary decree was incompetent (k), or infructuous as the final decree cannot be contingent on the result of the appeal from the preliminary decree (l), and that if the final decree is passed after institution of the appeal from the preliminary decree the latter should be amended to include an appeal from the final decree (m)

The Madras and Allahabad High Courts had held that an appeal from the preliminary decree is competent although no appeal has been filed against the final decree, and that after the preliminary decree is set aside the final decree falls with it (n) upon which they differ and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

(3) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to alter or otherwise affect any provision of the letters patent of any High Court

Difference between the old and new section.—This section corresponds with s 575 of the Code of 1882 except that the proviso to sub section (2) of the present section differs in several material respects from the proviso to the second paragraph of s 575. The proviso to the second paragraph of s 575 ran as follows —

Provided that if the Bench hearing the appeal is composed of two Judges belonging to a Court consisting of more than two Judges, and the Judges composing the Bench differ in opinion on a point of law, the appeal may be referred to one or more of the other Judges of the same Court, and shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of all the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it”

As to the points of distinction between the old and the new section, see notes below “The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only, and “By whom appeal to be heard upon point of law stated.”

Amendments.—Sub sec (3) was added by the Repealing and Amending Act 18 of 1928

Difference of opinion as to part of decree.—When a Bench of two Judges agree in reversing part of a decree but differ as to the rest, the portion on which they agree will be reversed and the rest confirmed (o)

“Differ in opinion on a point of law”—No reference can be made under this section if the Judges differ on a question of fact. The power to refer can only be exercised if there is a difference of opinion on a point of law (p)

“The appeal shall then be heard upon that point only.—Under the old section it was the appeal that was referred to a third Judge when the Judges hearing the appeal differed in opinion on a point of law and it was held that on such reference the whole appeal was open for argument, and not only the point of law on which the Judges had differed (q). Under the present section the Judges have to state the point of law upon which they differ and the appeal is to be heard upon that point only

By whom appeal to be heard upon point of law stated.—Where a point of law on which the Judges hearing the appeal differ has been stated, the appeal is to be heard upon that point by one or more of the other Judges of the Court. This was, in fact, the practice followed in Bombay under the Code of 1882 (r). In Allahabad the appeal was heard by a Bench including the Judges who first heard it (s) sub section (3) is that sec 98 applies only to Courts other than Chartered High Courts. The difference of procedure between cl 36 and sec 98 is (1) that while a reference on the point of difference is obligatory under cl 36, it is optional under sec 98, and (2) while a reference under cl 36 may be on a question of fact and law, it can be a question of law only under sec 98. See notes under cl 36 of the Letters Patent.

Income Tax Act.—It is clause 36 of the Letters Patent that applies to a reference to the High Court under sec 66 of the Income Tax Act, 1922, and not sec 98 of the Code (c)

99. [S. 578.] No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded, in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court.

No decree to be reversed or modified for error or irregularity not affecting merits or jurisdiction

Changes introduced by the section—This section corresponds with sec 578 of the Code of 1882, except in the following respects —

- 1 The words "any misjoinder of parties or causes of action" are new. As to the effect of these words see notes to O 2, r 3 "Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action," and "Procedure in case of multifariousness," and notes to O 2, r 4, "Leave of the Court"
- 2 The words, "in any proceedings in the suit," have been substituted for the words, "whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise" As to the effect of this alteration, see notes below, "In any proceeding in the suit"

Scope of the section—The mere circumstance of there being an error, defect or irregularity in any proceeding in a suit is no ground for reversing or varying a decree in appeal. But if it appears that the error, defect or irregularity affected the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court, it would be a ground for reversing or varying the decree. Where an irregularity is one which affects the merits of a case or the jurisdiction of a Court, it is said to be a material irregularity. Where it does not, it is usually spoken of as a mere irregularity. This section cures a mere irregularity, error or defect. It does not cure a material irregularity, error or defect.

"Misjoinder of parties or causes of action"—This expression may be analysed and the rule contained in this part of the section may be stated as follows.—

No decree shall be reversed or substantially varied, nor shall any case be remanded in appeal, on account of—

- (1) misjoinder of plaintiffs (O 1, r 1),
- (2) misjoinder of defendants (O 1, r 3),
- (3) misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action (O 2, r 3) [The practice was different under the Code of 1882, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of misjoinder of plaintiffs and causes of action"],
- (4) misjoinder of defendants and causes of action (d) [O 2, r 3] [The practice was different under the Code of 1882, see notes to O 2, r 3, "Procedure in case of multifariousness"],

- (5) misjoinder of causes of action (e) (O 2, rr 3-4 and 5) See notes to O 2, r 4, "Leave of the Court"

The words, "on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action," have been inserted in the section to make it clear that such a misjoinder is to be treated as a mere irregularity

Non joinder.—The Madras High Court has held that the expression "misjoinder" in this section includes "non joinder" (f). But this was doubted in a later Madras case (g). The non joinder of a necessary party is a defect which affects jurisdiction and is not within this section (h). See O 1, r 9, and notes thereto.

Error, defect or irregularity not affecting the merits of the case.—A decree will not be reversed or substantially varied in appeal for admitting a document not properly stamped (i), or for admitting a document declared invalid where the judgment is not based on that document (j) or because the wrong side was allowed to begin (k) or because the suit was decided on a Sunday (l), or because the suit was instituted by an agent under a defective power of attorney (m) [O 3, r 2], or because an order allowing execution against the legal representative of a deceased judgment debtor was made by the transferee Court instead of by the Court which passed the decree (n). All these are irregularities not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court and they are cured by this section. The exclusion of evidence by the lower Court is an irregularity which may or may not affect the merits of the case if it does not the irregularity is condoned under this section (o). An omission to draw up a final decree under O 34, r 5 has been condoned under this section (p). For other cases see—

"In any proceedings in the suit. —These words have been substituted for the words, 'whether in the decision or in any order passed in the suit or otherwise,' which occurred in sec. 578 of the Code of 1882. The latter words were held to apply only to irregularities in proceedings subsequent to the institution of the suit, and not to irregularities in the frame or institution of the suit (g). The rules of the Chief Court of Oudh require money deposited in Court to be paid to the person entitled through the Treasury, but when the Munsiff paid the money directly this was held to be an irregularity cured by this section (r). The present section applies to irregularities in any proceedings in the suit.

Suits Valuation Act, 1887, section II—Sec. II of the Suits Valuation Act, 1887, modifies the provisions of the present section in cases where an objection is taken in appeal that by reason of the over valuation or under valuation of a suit a Court which had no jurisdiction with respect to the suit exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto. The section is as follows—

- (1) Notwithstanding anything in section [99] of the Code of Civil Procedure, an objection that by reason of the over valuation or under valuation of a suit or appeal, a Court of first instance or lower appellate Court which had not jurisdiction with respect to the suit or appeal exercised jurisdiction with respect thereto shall not be entertained by an appellate Court unless—
 - (a) the objection was taken in the Court of first instance at or before the hearing at which issues were first framed and recorded, or in the lower appellate Court in the memorandum of appeal to that Court, and
 - (b) the appellate Court is satisfied for reasons to be recorded by it in writing that the suit or appeal was over valued or under valued, and that the over valuation or under valuation thereof has prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit or appeal on its merits
- (2) If the objection was taken in the manner mentioned in clause (a) of sub section (1), but the appellate Court is not satisfied as to both the matters mentioned in clause (b) of that sub section, and has before it the materials necessary for the determination of the other grounds of appeal to itself, it shall dispose of the appeal as if there had been no defect of jurisdiction in the Court of first instance or lower appellate Court
- (3) If the objection was taken in that manner and the appellate Court is satisfied as to both those matters and has not those materials before it, it shall proceed to deal with the appeal under the rules applicable to the Court with respect to the hearing of appeals, but if it remands the suit or appeal, or frames and refers issues for trial or requires additional evidence to be taken, it shall direct its order to a Court competent to entertain the suit or appeal.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES

100. [S 584] (1) Save where otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court, on any of the following grounds, namely :—

Second Appeal

- (a) the decision being contrary to law or to some usage having the force of law ;
- (b) the decision having failed to determine some material issue of law or usage having the force of law ,
- (c) a substantial error or defect in the procedure provided by this Code or by any other law for the time being in force, which may possibly have produced error or defect in the decision of the case upon the merits

(2) An appeal may lie under this section from an appellate decree passed ex parte

Changes introduced by the section —The word ' specified ' in the expression " specified law or usage " which occurred in cl (a) of sec 584 of the repealed Code has been omitted, see the undermentioned case (s)

Scope of the section —This section deals with second or special appeals to the High Court. A Court of first appeal is competent to enter into questions of fact, and decide whether the findings of facts by the lower Court are or are not erroneous. But a Court of second appeal is not competent to entertain questions as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below (f). A second appeal can only lie on one or other of the grounds specified in the present section (w). A judge to whom a memorandum of second appeal is presented for admission is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds specified in this section exist and apply to the case, and if they do not to reject the appeal summarily (t). The limitations to the power of the Court imposed by secs 100 and 101 in a second appeal ought to be attended to, and an appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact (w). Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section [100]. No Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds' (x).

No second appeal lies on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact —In Durga Choudhram v Jauahar Singh (y), the Privy Council held that there is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however gross the error may seem to be. No doubt a second appeal lies where there is a substantial error or defect in procedure [see cl (c)], but an erroneous finding of fact is a different thing from an error or defect in procedure. Where there is no error or defect in procedure, the finding of the first appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding (z) In Ramratan Sukul v Musamat Andu (a), the Judicial Committee said " It has now been conclusively settled that the third Court, which in this case was the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court, if there is evidence to be considered the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be if examined, must stand final " The mere fact that the High Court would have upon the documents and evidence placed before the Court of first appeal come to a different conclusion is no ground for a second appeal This section was enacted for the express purpose of securing some measure of finality in cases where the balance of evidence verbal and documentary arose for decision (b) In Nafir Chandra Pal v Shukur (c) their Lordships said " Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other, but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact If the question to be decided is one of fact it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which are not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights but are merely historical documents have to be construed (d) A second appeal will not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first appellate Court has made a mistake as to its meaning (e) But a second appeal will lie if the documents erroneously construed themselves constitute the foundation of rights claimed (f) The question whether a statutory presumption has been rebutted is always a question of fact (g) Accordingly no second appeal lies from a finding that an oral sale in the Punjab is not proved and that entries in the Record of Rights are erroneous (h) Again if there is evidence to support the finding of the appellate Court that the appellants are not tenure holders and that an entry to that effect in the Record of Rights is erroneous no second appeal will lie (i) A finding on appeal that an estate had not been privately partitioned previously to its partition under the Estates Partition Act, 1897, is entirely a finding of fact and is binding on the High Court in second appeal (j) But an appeal will lie if it can be shewn that the appellate Court has misdirected itself on a point of law in dealing with the evidence (k) For if the appellate Court has based its finding on the failure of a party to discharge the onus of proof which has been wrongly held to be incumbent on him, the finding, though a finding of fact is not based on positive evidence (l)

Changes introduced by the section—The word ‘ specified ’ in the expression ‘ specified law or usage ’ which occurred in cl (a) of sec 584 of the repealed Code has been omitted, see the undermentioned case (a)

Scope of the section—This section deals with second or special appeals to the High Court. A Court of first appeal is competent to enter into questions of fact, and decide whether the findings of facts by the lower Court are or are not erroneous. But a Court of second appeal is not competent to entertain questions as to the soundness of a finding of fact by the Court below (i). A second appeal can only lie on one or other of the grounds specified in the present section (ii). A judge to whom a memorandum of second appeal is presented for admission is entitled to consider whether any of the grounds specified in this section exist and apply to the case, and if they do not, to reject the appeal summarily (iii). The limitations to the power of the Court imposed by secs 100 and 101 in a second appeal ought to be attended to, and an appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first appellate Court upon a matter of fact (iv). ‘ Nothing can be clearer than the declaration in the Civil Procedure Code that no second appeal will lie except on the grounds specified in section [100]. finding (2) In Lamratu Sulai v. Musamat Vandu (a) the Judicial Committee said "It has now been conclusively settled that the third Court which in this case was the Court of the Judicial Commissioner cannot entertain an appeal upon any question as to the soundness of findings of fact by the second Court, if there is evidence to be considered the decision of the second Court, however unsatisfactory it might be if examined, must stand final. The mere fact that the High Court would have upon the documents and evidence placed before the Court of first appeal come to a different conclusion is no ground for a second appeal. This section was enacted for the express purpose of securing some measure of finality in cases where the balance of evidence verbal and documentary arose for decision (b). In Nafir Chandra Pal v. Shukur (c) their Lordships said "Questions of law and of fact are sometimes difficult to disentangle. The proper legal effect of a proved fact is necessarily a question of law, so also is the question of admissibility of evidence and the question of whether any evidence has been offered on one side or the other, but the question whether the fact has been proved, when evidence for and against has been properly admitted, is necessarily a pure question of fact." If the question to be decided is one of fact it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which are not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundation of rights but are merely historical documents have to be construed (d). A second appeal will not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first appellate Court has made a mistake as to its meaning (e). But a second appeal will lie if the documents erroneously construed them-effect in the Record of Rights is erroneous, no second appeal will lie (f). A finding on appeal that an estate had not been privately partitioned previously to its partition under the Estates Partition Act, 1897, is entirely a finding of fact and is binding on the High Court in second appeal (g). But an appeal will lie if it can be shown that the appellate Court has misdirected itself on a point of law in dealing with the evidence (h). For if the appellate Court has based its finding on the failure of a party to discharge the onus of proof which has been wrongly held to be incumbent on him, the finding, though a finding of fact is not based on positive evidence (i).

Decision being contrary to law.—A second appeal will lie where the decision of the lower appellate Court is contrary to law. The term "law" in cl (a) is not limited in its meaning to statute law; it means general law (m).

When the question is one of a right construction of a document (n), or of a legal inference from a document (o), the question is one of law, and a second appeal will lie. Thus where in a suit for a declaration of the plaintiff's proprietary title to the land in suit the lower appellate Court found on a construction of the wajib-ul-arz and other documentary evidence relating to the land that the plaintiffs were proprietors, their Lordships of the Privy Council held that the right construction of the documents was a question of law which the High Court was not precluded from considering in second appeal. In the course of the judgment their Lordships said: "That finding (namely, that the plaintiffs were proprietors of the lands) of the Subordinate Judge was the result of his having misconstrued the wajib-ul-arz. The right construction of documents is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not by secs 554 and 555 of the Code of Civil Procedure (now secs 100 and 101) precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court based upon such documents. The Subordinate Judge arrived at his finding by inferences drawn upon an incorrect construction of the wajib-ul-arz and the Judges in second appeal consequently were not bound by his finding that the plaintiffs were the proprietors of the lands" (p). Similarly the question whether a writing which is ostensibly a deed of absolute sale and an agreement by the purchaser to reconvey the property to the vendor constitute an out and out sale and an agreement for reconveyance or a mortgage by conditional sale, is a question of construction of documents, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal (q). In a Privy Council case where the question was whether the possession of properties by a Hindu widow was merely in lieu of maintenance and not adverse to the plaintiffs, their Lordships held that the question was one of inference from documents and not one of fact, and that they were therefore entitled to draw their conclusion notwithstanding the concurrent opinions of the Courts in India (r). But where the question is not one of construction of a document or of legal inference to be drawn from a document, but is one as to the effect to be given to a document as evidence of a fact or facts in issue, a second appeal is not admissible. Thus when the question was whether certain pension monies were included in a watan or hereditary endowment and two Courts after an examination of the sanad and other relevant documents had found that they were not, the Privy Council held that the High Court in second appeal was not entitled to reverse the finding unless the documents had been misconstrued (s). Thus where a suit involves a question of the fact of adoption, and documents are produced as evidence of the fact of adoption, the question whether the documents do or do not support the alleged adoption is a question of fact, and no second appeal will lie (t). The law on the subject was thus stated by Mookerjee, J, in Makund Deb v Gopi Nath (u). "We hold accordingly that, unless there is a question of the legal effect of a deed which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of the suit, a second appeal does not lie. A second appeal is not admissible, merely because some portion of the evidence is in writing of which the meaning has been mistaken by the lower appellate Court.

Where the lower appellate Court arrives at a conclusion which is an inference based upon an erroneous view of the law, the judgment is open to question in second appeal (r). A judgment is also open to question in second appeal where a defect in the judgment is due to an error as to the admissibility of evidence (x) or where secondary evidence is admitted in contravention of the provisions of secs. 65 and 66 of the Indian Evidence Act (x) or where there is failure to invoke a presumption of fact under sec. 144 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 (y). The question of burden of proof is a question of law, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in second appeal if the lower appellate Court has placed the burden on the wrong party (z). A second appeal will also lie where an unregistered document which requires registration is admitted in evidence (a).

Where the Court of first instance grants a mandatory injunction for the demolition of a building and the decree is reversed in appeal on an erroneous view of the law, a second appeal will lie (b). Though a person may not have been duly appointed executor he may render himself liable as an executor if he intermeddles with the estate of the deceased, misapplication of law on this point is a good ground for a second appeal (c). The question whether a stipulation in a contract is by way of penalty is a question of law which renders a second appeal competent (d).

Where an appeal which ought to have been preferred to the High Court is preferred to a District Court and the latter Court hears and decides the appeal the decision is contrary to law, and a second appeal will lie from the decree of the District Court (e). The High Court of Madras has held that where a Court assumes jurisdiction which it would not have had if the facts necessary to determine the question of jurisdiction had been rightly decided, a second appeal lies from the findings of facts (f).

A second appeal will lie where the question is one of proper inference in law from findings of facts—Though a second appeal does not lie from a finding of fact yet where a legal conclusion is drawn from the finding a second appeal will lie under cl. (a) of the section on the ground that the legal conclusion was erroneous. Thus the question whether possession is adverse or not is often one of simple fact, but it may also be a conclusion of law or a mixed question of law and fact. Where the question of adverse possession is one of simple fact, no second appeal will lie, but a second appeal will lie from a finding as to adverse possession when such finding is a mixed question of law and fact depending upon the proper legal conclusion to be drawn from the findings as to simple facts (g). Similarly the question whether a Hindu family is joint or separate is generally a question of fact, but in certain circumstances it may be a mixed question of fact and law and open to reconsideration by the High Court in second appeal (h).

finding is a question of law (z) In Pilaniappa v D. Vankimony (a) the Privy Council said that the Judge must first find what are the things actually done in alleged pursuance of the custom and then decide whether these facts satisfy the requirements of law. The first is a question of fact and the second a question of law. Thus in a case where a mirasdar's right under an alleged local custom was in question the Madras High Court held that findings as to what things were actually done in alleged pursuance of the custom were questions of fact with which the High Court could not interfere, but the inference as to the existence and the decision as to the validity of the custom were matters of law subject to revision by the High Court in second appeal (b). The Madras High Court made the same distinction in a case where the question was whether a holding was transferable by a local custom (c), and so have that Allahabad (d) and Bombay (e) High Courts. In two cases the Allahabad High Court has said that it will interfere if the Allahabad High Court held that a wrong construction of wajih-ul arzes coupled with a wrong inference from certain facts constituted an error of law which justified interference in second appeal (h). As to certificates under sec 41 (3) of the Punjab Court Act VI of 1918, in cases of custom, see the undermentioned cases (j)

Clause (c) substantial error or defect in procedure—

No evidence to go to a jury—Case not raised by parties—Misconception of evidence—Evidence misread or misunderstood—Overlooking material evidence—Irrelevant matters— A second appeal will lie where there is, as an English lawyer would express it, no evidence to go to the jury, because that does not raise a question of fact such as arises upon the issue itself, but a question of law for the consideration of the Judge (g). Thus where the lower appellate Court found that a deed of compromise was not for the benefit of a certain infant, and there was no evidence in the case upon which that Court could found its judgment it was held by the Judicial Committee that the case was one of a substantial error or defect in the procedure of the first appellate Court and that it was a ground for a second appeal to the High Court (k). In a case where the lower appellate Court had come to a finding of fraud, although, in point of law there was no evidence to support the finding, the Privy Council held that the Judicial Commissioner was within his powers in second appeal in deciding the case on the evidence on the record (l). The High Court in second appeal is not bound by a finding as to whether the defendants were permanent tenants liable to pay a reasonable rent when the finding was based neither on evidence nor admission (m). Again when the lower appellate Court inferred from the fact that a Refusal by Court of first appeal to extend time for filing appeal—Where an application is made to a Court of first appeal to admit an appeal from the original decree after the expiration of the period of limitation, that Court has the power, on sufficient cause being shown to admit the appeal [Limitation Act s 5]. If the lower appellate Court refuses to admit the appeal, holding in the exercise of its discretion that there was no sufficient cause for not presenting the appeal within the prescribed time there is no ground for a second appeal. The principle is that where a Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reasonable way, the High Court has no power to interfere in second appeal. But if the lower appellate Court does not exercise its discretion at all, or exercise it capriciously and arbitrarily, or without proper legal material to support its decision a second appeal will lie under cl (a) of the section (g).

New case in second appeal — An appellant should not be allowed to set up a new case in second appeal (1), nor should he be allowed to raise a new issue not supported by the evidence on the record (2). See notes below.

Pleas which may be taken for the first time in special appeal—An appellant will not be allowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a plea not taken by him in the lower Court. But if the objection is one which goes to the very root of the case it may be taken for the first time in second appeal (l). Thus an objection to jurisdiction may be taken for the first time in special appeal if it is patent on the face of the record (i) except, it is submitted, in those cases which fall within sec. 21 above. Similarly the plea of res judicata may be taken for the first time in second appeal provided it can be decided upon the record before the Court (m). So also the plea of want of notice in an ejectment suit (n). As to the plea of limitation, see notes to O. 41 r. 2, "Leave of Court Limitation," which refer to first appeals apply also to second appeals (o).

The High Court will entertain in second appeal a point of law although it has not been raised in any of the lower Courts provided the point of law arises on the findings of the lower Court or on the issues as framed and on the evidence already recorded. Thus where the lower appellate Court awarded to the plaintiff a third share of the property in suit on the ground that remoter gotra apin las inherited per stirpes and the defendant preferred a second appeal to the High Court on the ground that the plaintiff was not entitled to any share at all the defendant was allowed to contend at the hearing of the second appeal that the plaintiff was not entitled in any event to more than a sixth share as remoter gotra sapindas inherited per capita and not per stirpes (p). But the High Court will not entertain a point of law raised for the first time in second appeal, if the point cannot be decided without remanding the case for further evidence (q). A Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has held that a point of law not taken in the lower Appellate Court cannot be raised in second appeal unless it is a point involving res judicata, jurisdiction or a point the decision of which is necessary to prevent further litigation, and then only if the question does not necessitate the taking of further evidence (r). The Privy Council quoted with approval in an appeal from Rangoon (s), the following passage from a judgment of Lord Watson in Connecticut Fire Insurance Co v. Karanagh (t). 'When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent but expedient in the interests of justice to entertain the plea.' Nor can a point of law be taken for the first time in second appeal if it sets up a new right differing in kind from that asserted throughout the trial, and not merely in degree as in the above case. Thus where the right claimed by one of the defendants was treated as one of maintenance only in the Courts below, she was not allowed to contend in second appeal that besides maintenance, she was entitled to a half share in the property (u).

Provincial Insolvency Act—Section 75 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, 1920 allows a second appeal from a decision of a Court subordinate to a District Court under sec. 4 of that Act on the grounds mentioned in sub sec. (1) of this section (v).

101. [S 585] No second appeal shall lie except on the grounds mentioned in section 100

Second appeal on no other grounds

102. [S 586] No second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, when the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit does not exceed five hundred rupees

No second appeal in certain suits

Suits of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes—Whether a suit is or is not of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is to be determined in the light of the provisions of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act 9 of 1887 [see ss. 15, 16 and 27]. If a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court and the value of the subject-matter of the suit does not exceed Rs. 500, no second appeal will lie, though the suit has not been tried in a Small Cause Court or though the Small Cause Court returns the plaint under sec. 23 of the said Act to be presented to another Court on the ground that it involves a question of title and is not therefore cognizable by that Court. The reason is that it is the nature of the suit, and not the Court in which it is tried, that determines the right of appeal (w). The words 'any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes' mean any suit relating to a subject matter over which a Court of Small Causes would have jurisdiction if the claim were within the pecuniary limits of its jurisdiction (x). In determining whether a second appeal lies under this section, the original character of the suit is to be regarded rather than the character it may subsequently assume by operation of the findings of the Court (y). Nor should regard be had to the mode of trial of the suit, thus a suit which is of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes is none the less so because instead of being tried under the summary procedure it has been tried in the ordinary manner (z). In applying this section it makes no difference that the decree sought to be appealed from was passed by the lower appellate Court in review (a). A suit cognizable by a Small Cause Court was decreed by a first class Subordinate Judge in his Small Cause Court jurisdiction and it was transferred for execution against immovable property to his regular jurisdiction. The order passed on an objection to attachment was appealable to the District Judge by virtue of the provisions of sec. 42 above, as execution was in the regular jurisdiction, but no second appeal lay as the suit was of the nature cognizable by a Court of Small Causes (b).

Suit for mesne profits—Section 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act gives jurisdiction to Courts of Small Causes to take cognizance of all suits of a civil nature of which the value does not exceed Rs. 500 except such suits as are specified in the second schedule of the Act. That schedule consists of several articles of which art. 31 is the most important for the purposes of the present section. That article excludes from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Courts "any other suit for an account including a suit for the profits of immovable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant". This article contemplates cases in which the plaintiff claims an account of moneys which the defendant has received and to an account of which the plaintiff is entitled, because the moneys received belonged to him. It has been held by a majority of the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court that a suit for mesne profits does not fall under this article, in other words it is cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Such a suit is not a suit "for the profits of immovable properties belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant". A suit for mesne profits is a suit for damages in which the defendant would be liable even if no profits have been actually received by him during the period of dispossession. For in sec. 2, sub sec. (12), of the Code, mesne profits are defined as profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom (c). On the other hand, it has been held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (d), that a suit for mesne profits does come within art. 31 of the said Act, and is therefore not cognizable by a Small Cause Court. Recent Bombay decisions are difficult to reconcile but the general effect of them is that a suit for mesne profits is a "suit for the profits of immovable property belonging to the plaintiff which have been wrongfully received by the defendant" within the meaning of art. 31 (e), but, that

Suit for rent—The High Courts of Madras and Rangoon have held that a suit for rent is a suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes (g) The High Court of Calcutta has held that it is not (h)

Suit for title—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for title relating to immovable property A suit, however, which is otherwise cognizable by a Small Cause Court, does not cease to be so, because it incidentally involves a question of title (i)

Suit for a declaration—A Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit for a declaratory decree The mere fact, however, that there is a prayer for a declaration will not prevent a suit from being of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court if the other reliefs claimed in the suit could be obtained without asking for a declaration (j)

Suit to enforce a call—Under sec 179 (2) of the Companies Act no claim founded on the liability of a contributory is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes A second appeal therefore lies in a suit against a shareholder to enforce a call for unpaid capital even though the claim is less than five hundred rupees (k)

Execution—The expression suit in this section includes proceedings (l) from which it follows that if a suit is of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court, no second appeal will lie from an order made in execution of the decree passed in the suit unless the value of the suit exceeds Rs 500 It is immaterial that the order in execution is made by a Court other than a Court of Small Causes or a Court vested with the powers of a Small Cause Court, as where the property attached in execution of the decree is immovable property and the order in execution is made by a First Class Subordinate Judge in his ordinary jurisdiction The test is what was the nature of the suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed and not the nature of the proceedings in execution (m) It is also immaterial that the amount sought to be recovered in execution exceeds Rs 500 The test is not the amount claimed in execution proceedings but the amount of the subject matter of the suit (n) An order of remand made by an appellate Court in an appeal from an order of the Court executing a decree in a suit of the nature cognizable by a Small Cause Court is also not appealable (o)

Where the plaintiff decree holder applied under O 21 r 71, to recover Rs 360 being the deficiency of price from a defaulting purchaser and both the lower Courts disallowed the plaintiff's claim it was held that no second appeal lay to the High Court the reason given being that but for the provisions of r 71 a suit would have to be filed for that amount, in which case it would have been a Small Cause Court suit, and the application therefore must be treated as one made in execution of a Small Cause Court decree (p)

103. [New.] In any second appeal, the High Court may, if the evidence on the record is sufficient, determine any issue of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal which has not been determined by the lower appellate Court or which has been wrongly determined by such Court by reason of any illegality, omission, error or defect such as is referred to in sub-section (1) of section 100.

Power of High Court to determine issues of fact

Changes in the section.—That last part of the section beginning with the words “which has not been determined” was substituted by Act 6 of 1926 for the words “but not determined by the lower appellate Court” which occurred after the words “of the appeal.”

Scope of the section.—This section is new. It was amended by Act 6 of 1926 as stated above. The section as it now stands empowers the High Court in second appeal to determine issues of fact (1) where such issues have not been determined by the lower appellate Court or (2) where they have been wrongly determined by that Court, provided the evidence on the record is sufficient to enable the High Court to determine such issues. If the evidence on the record is not sufficient, the proper course is to refer the issues for trial under O. 41, r. 25.

In the absence of any such provision in the Code of 1882 there was a conflict of decisions as to the power of the High Court to determine in second appeal issues of fact which had not been determined by the lower appellate Court. On the one hand, it was held that where the evidence on the record was sufficient to enable the High Court to deliver judgment, the High Court had the power at the hearing of a second appeal itself to fix and determine issues of fact necessary for the disposal of the appeal but not determined by the lower appellate Court, as a remand in such a case would merely cause delay and increase costs (q). On the other hand, it was held that even if the evidence on the record was sufficient the High Court had no such power, and the only course open to it was to remand the issues for a finding to the lower appellate Court, the ground of the decisions being that the High Court had no power in second appeal to determine any issue of fact (r). The present section gives effect to the former view. It has been held under this section that where the High Court has framed issues and referred the same for trial to the lower Court under O. 41, r. 25, and the findings of the lower Court on those issues are incomplete, the High Court has power under this section to determine those issues if there are materials on which the High Court can come to a conclusion (s).

Under the section as it stood before it was amended by Act 6 of 1926, it was held that where a question of fact had been determined by the lower appellate Court, but the decision could not be supported because it was based in part on evidence improperly admitted, the High Court could not look at the evidence to decide whether the remaining evidence, after exclusion of evidence erroneously admitted, was sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below, and the proper course, it was held, was to remand the case to the lower Court (t). This resulted in unnecessary remands and the section has now been amended to enable the High Court itself in second appeal to come to the necessary

APPEALS FROM ORDERS.

104. [S. 588] (1) An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in

Orders from which appeals lie

force from no other orders —

- (a) an order superseding an arbitration where the award has not been completed within the period allowed by the Court,
- (b) an order on an award stated in the form of a special case,
- (c) an order modifying or correcting an award,
- (d) an order filing or refusing to file an agreement to refer to arbitration,
- (e) an order staying or refusing to stay a suit where there is an agreement to refer to arbitration,
- (f) an order filing or refusing to file an award in an arbitration without the intervention of the Court,
- (ff) an order under section 35 A,
- (g) an order under section 95,
- (h) an order under any of the provisions of this Code imposing a fine or directing the arrest or detention in the civil prison of any person except where such arrest or detention is in execution of a decree,
- (i) any order made under rules from which an appeal is expressly allowed by rules

Provided that no appeal shall lie against any order specified in clause (ff) save on the ground that no order, or an order for the payment of a less amount, ought to have been made

(2) No appeal shall lie from any order passed in appeal under this section

Appealable orders—This section and O 43, r 1, contain a full list of appealable orders. The words, "save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force," are new. See notes below under the head "Letters Patent appeal."

Clause (a)—See Schedule II, paragraph (8), and notes thereto

Clause (b)—See Schedule II, paragraph (11), and notes thereto

Clause (c)—See Schedule II, paragraph (12), and notes thereto

Clause (d)—See Schedule II, paragraph (17), and notes thereto

Clause (e)—See Schedule II, paragraph (19). This clause does not apply to an order under sec 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1899 (t)

Clause (f)—See Schedule II, paragraph (21), and notes thereto. It has been held by the High Court of Calcutta that this clause does not apply to proceedings under cl (2) of sec 11 of the Arbitration Act, 1899, and that no appeal therefore lies under this clause from an order refusing to set aside an award made and filed under that Act, but the High Court has jurisdiction to hear the appeal under cl 15 of the Letters Patent (w). The Allahabad High Court has however held that an appeal lies under this clause against such an order (x). This has been dissented from by the Lahore High Court on the ground that the Arbitration Act is complete in itself and is not affected by rules as to appeal-laid down in the Code (y). But in a later decision another Bench of the same High Court assumed that an appeal was competent (z).

Clause (ff)—This clause was inserted in the section by Act 9 of 1922. See the proviso to sub sec (1).

Clause (h)—An appeal lies from an order of arrest before judgment (a). See O 16, rr 10, 12, 17 and 21 (summoning and attendance of witnesses), O 26, r 17 (attendance and examination of witnesses before Commissioner), O 39, r 2, sub r (3) (disobedience of injunction).

Clause (i)—See O 43, r 1

Proviso—The proviso was inserted in the section by Act 9 of 1922

Sub section (2)—Thus if an appeal is preferred under O 43, r 1 (a), from an order under O 7, r 10, returning a plaint to be presented to the proper Court, and an order is made in appeal remanding the case under O 41, r 23, no appeal lies from such order (b). This sub section, however, does not take away the right of appeal conferred by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (c). The High Court of Allahabad is the only Court that has held that it does (d). See notes below, "Letters Patent appeal." See also notes to O 41, r 23, "Appeal."

Section 154—There are some orders which were appealable under sec 588 of the repealed Code, which are not appealable under this section. As to these it is provided by sec. 151 that where the right to appeal has already accrued to a party before the commencement of this Code, such right shall not be affected by anything contained in this Code

Letters Patent appeal.—Clause 15 of the Letters Patent provides that an appeal lies from every "judgment" of a single Judge of the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction to other Judges of the Court. Now an order refusing to set aside an award is a "judgment" within the meaning of the said clause (e). It is clear that if such an order is made by a Munsif's Court, or by the Court of a Subordinate Judge, or by the District Court, no appeal will lie from it, for it is not an order specified in the present section. It is equally clear that if such an order is made by a Judge of the High Court, an appeal will lie from it under the Letters Patent, for the present section expressly saves the right of appeal given by any law for the time being in force. Upon this point there was a conflict of decisions under the Code of 1882. The conflict arose from the provision contained in sec. 588 of that Code that an appeal lay from orders specified in that section, and from no other orders [see sub-sec. (2) of the present section]. The question accordingly arose whether sec. 588, by declaring that no appeal lies from any order other than those specified in that section, took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent. It was held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, following a decision of the Privy Council (f), that sec. 588 did not take away the right of appeal given by cl. 15 of the Letters Patent (g), and that an appeal therefore lay from an order of a single Judge of the High Court refusing to set aside an award to the other Judges of the Court. On the other hand, it was held by the Allahabad High Court, on a different reading of the Privy Council case referred to above, that sec. 588 took away the right of appeal given by the Letters Patent (h), and that no appeal therefore lay from an order refusing to set aside an award, though the order might be made by a Judge of the High Court. It is submitted that the words "save as otherwise expressly provided by any law for the time being in force" include the Letters Patent, and that they were added into the present section to give effect to the Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay decisions. This is the view taken by the Lahore (i) and Madras (j) High Courts. The High Court of Allahabad, however, has adhered to its previous view even in cases under the present Code (k).

Privy Council appeal.—The provision in sub-sec. (2) deals with internal appeals within the limits of British India. It does not take away the general right of appealing to the Privy Council given by sec. 109. A applies to the District Judge of East Berar under Sch. II, para. 20, to file an award in Court. B opposes the application. The District Judge makes an order refusing to file the award. A appeals from the order [see cl. (f)] to the Judicial Commissioner. The Judicial Commissioner makes an order filing the award. B appeals to the King in Council from the order of the Judicial Commissioner.

105. [S. 591.] (1) Save as otherwise expressly provided, ^{Other orders.} no appeal shall lie from any order made by a Court in the exercise of its original or appellate jurisdiction; but, where a decree is appealed from, any error, defect or irregularity in any order, affecting the decision of the case, may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal.

(2) Notwithstanding anything contained in sub-section (1), where any party aggrieved by an order of remand made after the commencement of this Code from which an appeal lies does not appeal therefrom, he shall thereafter be precluded from disputing its correctness.

- 1 Sub-section (2) is new. See notes below, "Sub section (2): appeal from order of remand."
- 2 Sec 591 contained the words, "in any such order," after the word "irregularity" The word "such" has been omitted, as the expression "such order" gave rise to the contention in some cases before the Privy Council that sec 915 applied to non appealable orders only, a contention that was overruled by the Privy Council (n)

Scope of the section—An interlocutory order made in a suit is either appealable (s 104) or not appealable. This section, like the corresponding sec 591, applies to any order, that is, to appealable as well as non appealable order. Where an interlocutory order is appealable, the party against whom the order is made is not bound to prefer an appeal against it, but he may make the irregularity in the order a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit appeal from every interlocutory order by which he may conceive himself aggrieved, under the penalty, if he does not do so, of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the appellate Court. Nothing would be more detrimental to the expeditious administration of justice than the establishment of a rule which would impose upon a party the necessity of appealing, whereby on the one hand he might be harassed with endless expense and delay, and on the other inflict upon his opponent similar calamities. It was so observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moheshwar Singh v The Bengal Government (o) and in subsequent cases (p), and it is this principle that underlies the present section. The present section makes it quite clear that an order appealable under sec 104 may be questioned under sec 105 in an appeal from the decree in the suit although no appeal from the order has been preferred under sec 104 (q). Sub section (2) is an exception to this rule. See note infra "Sub-section (2) appeal from order of remand". Even where the interlocutory order is one from which no appeal lies an error defect or irregularity in that order may be set forth as a ground of objection in the memorandum of appeal, where an appeal is preferred from the decree in the suit in which the order was made (r)

"Affecting the decision on the case"—It has been held by almost all the High Courts that the words "affecting the decision of the case" mean affecting the decision of the case on its merits. It has accordingly been held that an order cannot be attacked in appeal from a final decree unless the error, defect or irregularity in the order is one affecting the decision of the case on the merits (a). It has thus been held by the High Court of Allahabad, Calcutta and Lahore that an order under O 9, r 13, setting aside an ex parte decree, is not an order that affects the merits of the case, such an order merely ensures a hearing upon the merits, hence the order cannot be attacked in an appeal from the decree in the suit (b). But there are cases in which this reason does not apply for an order setting aside an ex parte decree may not have the effect of securing a hearing on the merits. Thus when an application is made to set aside an ex parte final decree in a suit on a mortgage with a view to raising a point of limitation which would render the preliminary decree futile, the order setting aside the ex parte decree may be attacked in the appeal from the final decree (c). Again if the ex parte decree has been set aside as against two defendants at the instance of one defendant by a mistaken application of O 9, r 13 the error affects the decision on the merits and the order may be attacked in the appeal of the other defendant (d). Conversely if an ex parte decree has been set aside as against some of the defendants and the proviso to O 9, r 13 has not been applied so that the necessary parties are not on the record, the error affects the decision on the merits and the order may be attacked in appeal (e). The Rangoon High Court refuses to read the words on its merits into this section and allows an order setting aside an ex parte decree to be impugned in final appeal (f).

An order remanding an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court is not an order affecting the decision of the case and cannot be challenged in second appeal (y)

An order under O 41, r 20, re-admitting an appeal which has been dismissed for default, is not one which affects the decision of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be attacked in an appeal from the final decree (z).

It has been held by the High Courts of Bombay, Madras, Allahabad and Calcutta that an order setting aside an award and directing the case to be tried by the Court may be attacked in appeal from the final decree (a) the reason given in the Allahabad case being that such an order affects the decision of the case on the merits (b). The High Court of Lahore has taken a different view (c), but the attention of the Court was not drawn to the decisions of the other High Courts.

An order setting aside an abatement under O 22, r 9 does not affect the decision of the case on the merits. Rather it re-opens the hearing of the case on the merits, and it cannot therefore be challenged in appeal from the final decree (d). But there is a difference of opinion whether an order setting aside an abatement may be so attacked if it is made simultaneously with the final decree in the suit. It has been held by the High Court of Allahabad that it may be so attacked if passed simultaneously with the final decree (e). On the other hand, it has been held by the High Court of Calcutta, that an order setting aside an abatement cannot be challenged in an appeal from the final decree, whether it is passed before or simultaneously with the final decree (f). The Lahore High Court follows Calcutta (g).

An order refusing leave under sec 20 (b) cannot be attacked in an appeal from an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court (h).

"Error, defect or irregularity"—The error, defect or irregularity referred to in this section must be an error, defect or irregularity in law or procedure, and not in matters of fact (i).

"Where a decree is appealed from."—This section contemplates two things namely, (1) a regular appeal from a decree and (2) the insertion in that appeal of a ground of objection relating to an interlocutory order. The High Court of Allahabad has held that no appeal will lie where the appeal is ostensibly against the decree passed in the suit, but the grounds of appeal are solely directed against an interlocutory order made in the suit (j). On the other hand, the High Courts of Calcutta and Madras have held that such an appeal will lie, though the only reason for the appeal is an erroneous decision in regard to an interlocutory order (k).

It should be noted that in order to take advantage of the provisions of this section the ground of objection must be set out in the memorandum of appeal (l).

Sub section (2) appeal from order of remand.—An order under O 41 r 23 remanding a case, is appealable, where an appeal would lie from the decree of the Appellate Court [O 43, r 1, cl (u)]. Such an order was also appealable under the Code of 1882 [see sec 588, cl (28)]. Under sec 591 of the Code of 1882, it was held that a party aggrieved by an order of remand could object to its validity in an appeal against the final decree, though he might have appealed against the order under sec 588 and had not done so (m). Sub section (2) has been added to preclude an appellant from taking, on an appeal from the final decree, any objection that might have been urged by way of appeal from an order of remand (n). The effect of this sub-section has been said by Rankin, C J, to be that "a litigant, aggrieved by an order of remand from which an appeal lies, must appeal therefrom directly, or be precluded from disputing its correctness" (o).

Privy Council appeal.—This sub-section does not apply to Privy Council appeals (p). See notes to sec 109 "Final Order".

106. [S. 589.] Where an appeal from any order is allowed it shall lie to the Court to which an appeal would lie from the decree in the suit in which such order was made, or where such order is made by a Court (not being a High Court) in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, then to the High Court.

APPEALS TO THE KING IN COUNCIL

109. [s. 595] Subject to such rules as may, from time to time, be made by His Majesty in Council regarding appeals from the Courts of British India, and to the provisions hereinafter contained, an appeal shall lie to His Majesty in Council—

When appeals lie to King in Council

- (a) from any decree or final order passed on appeal by a High Court or by any other Court of final appellate jurisdiction,
- (b) from any decree or final order passed by a High Court in the exercise of original civil jurisdiction, and
- (c) from any decree or order, when the case, as hereinafter provided, is certified to be a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council

Ss 109 and 110 are to be read together. See also cl 39 of the Letters Patent. For rules of procedure in appeals to the King in Council see O 45 below

Difference between the old and the new section.—This section corresponds with s. 590 of the Code of 1882 except that in cls (a) and (b) the words "decree or final order" have been substituted for the words "final decree," and in cl (c) the words "or order" have been added after the word "decree."

Right of appeal to the Privy Council.—The right of appeal from the High Courts to the Privy Council now rests on cl 39 of the Letters Patent and this is elaborated in ss 109 and 110 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Therefore though there is no express provision in the Provincial Insolvency Act 1920 for appeal to the Privy Council from orders of the High Court made under that Act, an appeal to the Privy Council is competent, if the case comes under ss 109 and 110 of the Code (f). Similarly a decree of a High Court in a testamentary matter is appealable to His Majesty in Council although sec 299 of the Indian Succession Act 1925 provides only for an appeal to the High Court (u). Thus an appeal lies from a judgment of the High Court on the appellate side granting probate of a will (v).

(v) Tellanuram Serral v. J. Chammal Serral (1907) 5 I C 119, 99 I C 59 (27) 4 K. 58.

No right of appeal to the Privy Council—When a special statute dealing with a special class of cases uses with reference to the decision given by a tribunal set up under that Statute, the word final, the use of this word must be taken to indicate an intention to override section 109 and no appeal would lie from that decision. There is therefore no appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of a High Court under s 91 (3) of the Rangoon City Municipal Act (w). Again there is no right of appeal to the Privy Council from an order of a single Judge of a High Court either in appeal (x) or in second appeal (y) or in revision (z). See s 111 and notes thereon. An order of the High Court refusing to enrol a person as a legal practitioner under the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 is not one from which the High Court has jurisdiction to grant leave to appeal to the Privy Council. Such an order is one passed in the exercise of the administrative powers of the Court (a). Similarly an order passed by the Rangoon High Court striking an advocate off the rolls under the disciplinary jurisdiction conferred by clause 8 of its Letters Patent is one from which the High Court has no power to grant leave to appeal (b).

* Decree—For definition of decree see s 2 (2) above. An act of State is not a decree. Hence no appeal lies to the King in Council from an order of the Viceroy and Governor General of India in Council deposing the Maharajah of a Native State in India such an order being an act of State (c).

Preliminary Decree—An appeal lies to the King in Council from a preliminary decree e.g. a decree declaring the liability of a party and directing accounts to be taken (d).

Final Order—In Pamchand v Gopendharis (e) the Privy Council said that an order is final if it finally disposes of the rights of the parties. In that case a stay order under s 19 of the Arbitration Act had been reversed and the suit went back for trial. The appellate Court had thought that the order was final as it 'went to the root of the suit namely the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain it' and it was for this reason that the order was supposed to be final. But it was not final for the rights of the parties were still under trial. In Abdul Tahman v Cassim (f) a suit for damages had been dismissed on a preliminary ground and the High Court on appeal reversed the decree and remanded the suit for trial on the merits under O 41 r 23. The Privy Council held that this was not a final order. Sir George Lowndes said 'The finality must be a finality in relation to the suit. If, after the order, the suit is still a live suit in which the rights of the parties have still to be determined no appeal lies against it under s 109 (a)'. Their Lordships distinguished the previous Privy Council decisions of Rahimbhoy v Turner (g) and Muzhar Hossein v Bodha (h) as decided under the Code of 1852. In Rahimbhoy v Turner (i) the order was one determining the defendant's liability to account and directing accounts to be taken. This was held to be a final order as it determined the cardinal point in the suit which was the defendant's liability to account. In Muzhar Hossein v Bodha (j) the suit was to recover property which was the subject of a gift by will. The validity of the will was disputed and the High Court differing from the Court of first instance held that the will was valid and remanded the suit for subordinate inquiries. The Privy Council held that the order was a final order as it comprised a decision of the cardinal issue in the suit namely the validity of the will. The order in Rahimkhoy's case was one which under the present Code would be a preliminary decree, and with reference to Muzhar Hossein's case that if the effect of the decree had been merely to remand the suit for trial on the merits different considerations would have applied. In an earlier case where the lower Court refused to set aside an ex parte decree and the High Court remanded the suit for an inquiry on the merits the Privy Council held that the order of the High Court was not a final order but a purely interlocutory order directing procedure (k). An order remanding a suit for decision on the merits is therefore not a final order (l). But when the appellate Court set aside an ex parte decree so that the suit was restored to be tried de novo, the Allahabad High Court granted leave to appeal on the ground that the proceeding to set aside the ex parte order was an independent and final proceeding (m). When the lower Court dismisses a suit on the ground that it is barred by limitation, and the High Court reversing the decision remands the suit for trial the order is interlocutory (n). In another similar case, however, the Allahabad High Court said that they were not certain that the order might not fairly be described as final (o). And in another case such an order was held to be final as it had the effect of restoring a preliminary decree (p). When the lower Court held that a matter in issue in a suit was res judicata and the High Court held that it was not and remanded the suit for trial on the merits the order was held to be final (q). But in another such case the order was held to be final on the ground that it decided a cardinal point in the case (r).

An order refusing to appoint a receiver in a suit is not a final order and no appeal lies to the Privy Council (s). In a case where the High Court discharged an order made by the District Court appointing a receiver and the High Court granted leave to appeal, the Privy Council observed that as a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances, or some unusual occasion for its exercise, the power of making interlocutory orders was one which was not a suitable subject for review by the Judicial Committee (t).

The following are further instances of orders which have been held not to be final orders: an order of the appellate Court reversing the order of the Court of first instance refusing to set aside an abatement and directing the lower Court to rehear the application (u), an order reversing an order of the lower Court that the suit is barred by O. 2, r. 2 (1), or that the suit as framed is not maintainable (v), or that the plaintiff has no locus standi to maintain the suit (x), and remanding the suit for trial on the merits, an order in revision granting (y), or refusing (z) leave to sue in forma pauperis, an order granting a review (a), an order refusing an application to be brought on the record of a pending appeal as the legal representative of a deceased party (b), an order reversing the

and it has now been expressly held that under sec. 12 of the Limitation Act of 1908 the time requisite to obtain a copy of the decree appealed from is to be excluded (2)

Land Acquisition Act.—An award by the Court under Part III of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, is deemed to be a decree (r). An appeal therefore lies from a decree of a High Court on appeal from such an award. But the Privy Council will not interfere in matters involving valuation of property unless the judgment cannot be supported as it stands either by reason of a wrong application of principle or because some important part of the evidence has been overlooked or misapplied (s).

Interlocutory Orders—See cl 40 of the Letters Patent

Prerogative of the Crown—The Code does not limit the prerogative of the Crown to admit an appeal. See s. 112. Hence special leave may be granted by the King in Council to appeal where leave has been refused by the High Court (t) or even when leave has been wrongly granted by a High Court (u). But no special leave will as a rule be granted, unless there is some substantial question of law or general interest involved (v). Special leave granted on an ex parte application does not preclude the Board when the true facts are brought before it from going into the question whether the special leave is competent or not (u).

Clause (c) : Certificate as to fitness—Leave to appeal to the Privy Council may be granted (1) when a case fulfils the requirements of sec 110, or (2) when it is otherwise a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council. In either case a certificate has to be granted by the High Court, in the first case, a certificate to the effect that the case fulfils the requirements of sec 110 and is therefore a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council, and in the second case, that for other reasons it is a fit case for appeal to the Privy Council [see O 45, rr 2 3]. Clause (c) of the present section refers to the second class of cases. In this class of cases it is not necessary that the order should be a final one. Nor is it necessary that the value of the subject matter of the suit should be Rs 10 000 or upwards (x). The only condition necessary is that the case should be a fit one for appeal to the Privy Council. Referring to this clause Lord Hobhouse said: "That is clearly intended to meet special cases—such for example, as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money though it may be of great public or private importance." (y) This was amplified in a later case before the Judicial Committee where it was said that clause (c) contemplated "cases in which it is impossible to define in money value the exact character of the dispute, there are questions, as for example, those relating to religious rites and ceremonies, to caste and family rights, or such matters as the reduction of the capital of companies as well as questions of wide public importance in which the subject matter in dispute cannot be reduced into actual terms of money." Council on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the company might be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and that those questions were of importance to Indian companies generally the High Court of Bombay granted the requisite certificate. The order sought to be appealed from in that case was an order dismissing a petition presented by the company for a confirmation of a special resolution altering the memorandum of association of the company (a). Similarly when a case involved a substantial question of law, and the point in dispute, though not measurable by money, was of considerable importance, namely, the extent of the control acquired by one who had built a fire temple for Parsis at Udwarda, the High Court of Bombay granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council (b). Similarly the question as to what is the legal position of a person who has collected the debt of a deceased person by virtue of his being a holder of a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, was held to be a substantial question of law of general public importance, and leave to appeal was granted under cl (c) of this section (c). Leave to appeal was similarly granted where the question was whether a fraud practised by a mortgagor alone upon a Sub Registrar would vitiate registration and disentitle the innocent mortgagee from enforcing the mortgage (d), so also in a case involving the question whether it is necessary to register documents giving an option of repurchase (e). The mere existence of a substantial question of law is not sufficient to give the High Court jurisdiction to give leave to appeal under clause (c) of this section, the question must also be of great public or private importance (f). The question as to the right of Mahomedans to take out new religious processions is one of general importance to both the Hindu and the Mahomedan communities and is a fit case for leave to appeal (g). As to questions of private importance referred to in the judgment of Lord Hobhouse, it has been held that by private importance is meant private importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them (h). The right of appeal to the Privy Council from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated under sec 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, is given by sec 66A (2) only in a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for such an appeal. The High Court is justified in refusing a certificate in a case which in its view, does not raise any question of such importance as would warrant a certificate under this clause. It is not sufficient that the requirements of sec 110 of the Code are satisfied (i). But if the decision affects not only a particular assessee and depends upon the evidence in a particular case but is a question of great public importance depending upon general principles, a certificate should be given (j).

The High Court has under this clause to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. 'To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate' (l). The certificate must make plain upon its face that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and was exercised (l). It is the certificate, and not the order for the Council on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the company might be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and that those questions were of importance to Indian companies generally the High Court of Bombay granted the requisite certificate. The order sought to be appealed from in that case was an order dismissing a petition presented by the company for a confirmation of a special resolution altering the memorandum of association of the company (a). Similarly when a case involved a substantial question of law, and the point in dispute, though not measurable by money, was of considerable importance, namely, the extent of the control acquired by one who had built a fire temple for Parsis at Udawa, the High Court of Bombay granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council (b). Similarly the question as to what is the legal position of a person who has collected the debt of a deceased person by virtue of his being a holder of a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, was held to be a substantial question of law of general public importance, and leave to appeal was granted under cl (c) of this section (c). Leave to appeal was similarly granted where the question was whether a fraud practised by a mortgagor alone upon a Sub Registrar would vitiate registration and disentitle the innocent mortgagee from enforcing the mortgage (d), so also in a case involving the question whether it is necessary to register documents giving an option of repurchase (e). The mere existence of a substantial question of law is not sufficient to give the High Court jurisdiction to give leave to appeal under clause (c) of this section, the question must also be of great public or private importance (f). The question as to the right of Mahomedans to take out new religious processions is one of general importance to both the Hindu and the Mahomedan communities and is a fit case for leave to appeal (g). As to questions of private importance referred to in the judgment of Lord Hobhouse it has been held that by private importance is meant private importance to both parties to the litigation and not only to one of them (h). The right of appeal to the Privy Council from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated under sec 66 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1922, is given by sec 66A (2) only in a case which the High Court certifies to be a fit one for such an appeal. The High Court is justified in refusing a certificate in a case which, in its view, does not raise any question of such importance as would warrant a certificate under this clause. It is not sufficient that the requirements of sec 110 of the Code are satisfied (i). But if the decision affects not only a particular assessee and depends upon the evidence in a particular case but is a question of great public importance depending upon general principles a certificate should be given (j).

The High Court has under this clause to certify that the case is a fit one for appeal to His Majesty in Council. "To certify that a case is of that kind, though it is left entirely in the discretion of the Court, is a judicial process which could not be performed without special exercise of that discretion, evinced by the fitting certificate" (k). The certificate must make plain upon its face that the discretion conferred upon the High Court was invoked and was exercised (l). It is the certificate, and not the order for the Value of subject matter of suit

"The amount of value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance."—In some cases the value of the subject matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be over Rs. 10,000 and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be less than Rs. 10,000. In some cases, again, the value of the subject matter in the suit in the Court of first instance may be less than Rs. 10,000, and the value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council may be over Rs. 10,000. What the section requires is that the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance must be over Rs. 10,000 or upwards, and the value also of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. The word "and" in the first paragraph of this section means "and" and not "or" (s)

Mesne profits and interest—The only class of cases under the head, "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," that present any difficulty are those which include a claim for interest or for mesne profits. Prior to 1874 appeals to the Privy Council were governed by the Order in Council of April 10, 1838. By that Order it was prescribed that the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs. 10,000 or upwards. It was accordingly held by the Privy Council in cases that interest on money claims and mesne profits of immovable property subsequent to the date of the institution of the suit actually awarded by the decree appealed from may be added in calculating the value of the matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council, but not interest or mesne profits accruing subsequent to the decree, and if that amount was Rs. 10,000 or upwards a party was entitled to appeal though the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000 (t). It was also held that in no case could the costs of the suit be added to the principal in calculating the appealable value (u). The condition that the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance also should be Rs. 10,000 or upwards was first prescribed by the Privy Council Appeals Act 6 of 1874 and it was subsequently introduced into sec. 596 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1877. The first authoritative decision on the meaning of the words, "amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance," is that of the Judicial Committee in Moti Chand v. Ganga Prasad (v). In that case the Court of first instance passed a decree for the plaintiff for principal and interest up to the date of the decree amounting to Rs. 9,496, with further interest up to the date of realization. From this decree the defendant appealed to the High Court and that Court reversed the decree and dismissed the suit with costs. The plaintiff then applied to the High Court for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. On behalf of the plaintiff it was contended that interest subsequent to the decree should be added to the sum of Rs. 9,496, and that if that was done, the value of the subject matter of the suit would exceed Rs. 10,000. But this contention was overruled, and the application was refused on the ground that the claim and decree in the original Court were for less than Rs. 10,000. The plaintiff then applied to the King in Council for special leave to appeal, but the application was refused. The Privy Council said that the word "and" meant "and" and not "or" and that both conditions must be fulfilled. The amount recoverable under the decree was less than Rs. 10,000 and Lord Davey in delivering the judgment of the Board said: "In the present case the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance, construing that in the manner most favourable to the proposed appellant was at the outside the amount for which he recovered his decree, which was below Rs. 10,000'. The words italicized led to the impression that interest subsequent to the suit up to the date of the decree could be included in determining the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance. But this was corrected by the later decision of the Privy Council in Mangamma v. Mahalakshamma (10). In this case part of the property in suit consisted of promissory notes. Taking the promissory notes at their face value, the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was less than Rs. 10,000, but adding interest subsequent to suit and awarded by the decree the sum of Rs. 10,000 was exceeded. Their Lordships held that interest after the institution of the suit could not be included and approved the decision of the Madras High Court in Subramania Ayyar v. Sellammal (11) that in calculating the amount of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance mesne profits only up to the date of the suit can be added to the value of the property of which possession is claimed.

The rule therefore is that mesne profits and interest subsequent to the institution of the suit must be excluded in ascertaining the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance. The Calcutta cases to the contrary were dissented from by the Privy Council and are no longer law (y). Cases decided by other High Courts following the Calcutta decisions are also superseded (z). The Bombay High Court has followed the Madras case (a).

The rule in Mangamma v. Mahalakshamma would appear to apply also to mortgage suits and no interest subsequent to the institution of the suit can be added in computing the amount or value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance. But on this point previous decisions of the High Courts are conflicting. The Calcutta and Patna High Courts include interests up to the preliminary decree (b), and the Allahabad High Court up to the expiry of the six months period provided in O 34, r 6 (c).

Costs.—Costs cannot be included in determining the amount of the subject matter of the suit (d)

The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value.—In Rathu Krishna v Sunjaraswami (e), their Lordships of the Privy Council said “The sum of money actually at stake may not represent the true value. The proceeding may, in many cases, such as a suit for an instalment of rent or under a contract, raise the entire question of the contract relations between the parties and that question may, settled one way or the other, affect a much greater value, and its determination may govern rights and liabilities of a value beyond the limit.” It has thus been held that where the subject-matter in dispute relates to a recurring liability and is in respect of a property above the appealable value, the case is within the first paragraph of this section. Hence if the rent claimed in a suit is less than Rs. 10,000, but the liability is of a recurring nature, and the property is above that value, the value of the subject-matter must be deemed to be over Rs. 10,000 (f). It cannot, however, said where the suit is to enforce payment of an annuity of Rs 125 per annum, that the value of the subject matter of the suit is Rs 10,000 or upwards, for such an annuity cannot by any reasonable method of valuation be worth Rs 10,000 (g) Where the sole question was as to the destination of the income of the residue until the residuary attained twenty five, and the aggregate amount of the income was less than Rs 10,000 it was held that the value of the subject matter (namely, income) was less than Rs 10,000, though the value of the residue was over Rs 10,000 (h)

Value as laid in the plaint—If the plaint is not required to be valued for purposes of Court fee according to the real or market value but upon some other basis the doctrine of 'approbate and reprobate' does not apply and the plaintiff may shew when applying for a certificate of leave to appeal that the value exceeded Rs 10,000 although Court fee was paid on a lesser amount (i) But if the Court fee is payable on the market value the plaintiff who has paid Court fee on a smaller amount cannot maintain the contention that the suit should be treated for the purpose of an appeal to the Privy Council as involving over Rs 10,000 (j)

A defendant who has adopted the value given by the plaintiff in an appeal to the High Court cannot, when applying for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, contest the plaintiff's valuation, for he cannot both approbate and reprobate (l)

A plaintiff who sues in a Court which would have no jurisdiction if the value of the suit exceeded Rs 10,000 debars himself from claiming at a later stage to have the value of the subject matter of the suit for purposes of an appeal to the Privy Council, treated as exceeding Rs 10,000 Whether the judgment be in his favour or against him he has adopted a course of litigation as appropriate to the case and cannot claim a right of appeal which is inconsistent with the course adopted (l) But a suit for a declaration and injunction may be brought according to the value put upon the relief by the plaintiff in a Court whose jurisdiction is limited to Rs 5,000 and the plaintiff may shew that the value of the property involved is over Rs 10,000 This is because the value as laid in the plaint is not the real but the fiscal value and the case is under the second paragraph of section 110 (m) in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council must be Rs 10 000 or upwards. The word and in the first paragraph of the section cannot be read as or (o) The words 'amount or value of the subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council' mean the amount or value at the date of the High Court decree under appeal (p) A sues B to recover Rs 10 800. The trial Judge passes a decree for A for Rs 8 250 with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum from the date of suit till the date of realization. B appeals from the decree to the High Court, and A's suit is dismissed. A appeals for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. If interest were to be added to the decretal amount Rs 8 250 the valuation of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council would be over Rs 10 000. Is A entitled to add the interest? The Allahabad Court has held that he is not (q).

A mortgages his property to B. C claims that a portion of the property of the value of about Rs 6 000 belongs to him and that it did not belong to A. B then sues A on the mortgage, the mortgage debt being Rs 38,000, and joins C as a defendant. A decree is passed in favour of B on the mortgage. C's claim is allowed in part by the Court of first instance but it is disallowed altogether by the High Court. Is C entitled to appeal to the King in Council? No, because though the amount of the decree passed in favour of A exceeds Rs 10 000 the value of C's claim is less than Rs 10,000, (r). Note that C ought not to have been joined as a party to the suit at all [see notes to O 34, r 1, "Persons having an interest, etc."]

Single decree in several appeals.—A, claiming to be the next reversioner on the death of a Hindu widow, sues B, C and D, being alienees of separate items of the estate of the last male holder, and obtains a decree against them. B, C and D prefer separate appeals which are all disposed of by one decree. A applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decision as to the items in possession of B and D. The claims against the several alienees being based on really different causes of action, the fact that only one appellate decree was drawn up does not affect the requirements of this section, and consequently no leave can be granted in such of the appeals in which the value of the subject matter was below Rs. 10,000 (s).

Abandonment of appeal in part after grant of certificate.—A obtains a decree against B for Rs 11,000. B applies for leave to appeal from the decree to the Privy Council, and a certificate is granted. Afterwards in the printed case and at the hearing B withdraws part of his appeal reducing by so doing the amount in dispute to Rs 9,000. Does this render the appeal incompetent? No, if B had a bona fide intention, when he applied for a certificate, to appeal in respect of the whole amount of the decree (t).

Claim to property of value of Rs 10,000 or upwards

"Or the decree or final order must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to property of the value of Rs. 10 000 or upwards"—The decree or final order referred to in the second paragraph of the section is the decree or final order from which the appeal is to be preferred to the Privy Council. The material date for determining the value of the "property" under this paragraph is the date of that decree or order (u).

Note that the expression used in the second paragraph of this section is "property" while that used in the first paragraph is 'subject matter of the suit' and "subject matter in dispute on appeal to His Majesty in Council". It has been held by the High

Committee said Their Lordships think that this is not really consequential on the present decree and too remote to be entitled to the description of being property indirectly involved in the issue of this suit. It follows that the indirect relation must not be too remote, and so it has been held that the phrase 'directly or indirectly' refers to suits in existence and cannot be stretched to cover suits in gremio futuri (g). It refers to questions arising between the parties to the suit and not to suits which may hereafter be brought and which are not then pending (h) and the indirect relation must be decided with reference to actual circumstances at the time and not to circumstances which are remote (i). On the other hand the possibility of future suits may be taken into consideration if such suits will be affected by the doctrine of res judicata (j).

A sues B for a declaration that he is entitled to a one third share in the property in suit and for a decree for partition and for delivery of his share to him. The property exceeds Rs 10 000 in value, but the share claimed by A is of a value less than Rs 10 000. A decree is passed for A as prayed. B then applies for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. Does the decree involve a claim or question to property of a value exceeding Rs 10,000? Yes, according to the Calcutta (k) and Allahabad (l) High Courts. No, according to the Bombay High Court, unless there be other property outside the subject matter in dispute which can be affected by the decision (m). In one of the Bombay cases (n) Jenkins, C J, held that in order to determine the value prescribed by this section, the decree has to be looked at as it affects the interests of the parties prejudiced by it, and, where the detriment to the party seeking relief is estimated at less than Rs 10,000, then the value of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value, and the decree itself does not involve any claim or question to, or respecting property of, the prescribed value, and the case does not fulfil the requirements of the section. The Patna (o) and Rangoon (p) High Courts have followed the Bombay decisions. The High Court of Bombay has also held that in a suit by a partner for accounts and for recovery of his share, it is the value of the plaintiff's share that must be looked to, and not the value of the whole of the partnership assets (q). It appears, however, from a judgment of the same High Court in the undermentioned case (r) that if A sues B claiming the exclusive user of a well and compound valued at Rs 10,000 odd, and the High Court holds that A and B are equally entitled to the user, the decree must be deemed to involve property of the value of Rs 10,000 odd so as to entitle A to a certificate for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

In a suit for an easement of light and air claimed by the owner of property A against the owner of property B, it is the value of the easement, and not the value of property A, that determines the appealable value (s). The claim must be one to or respecting property of the value of Rs 10,000 or upwards and not a claim merely affecting such property. So when the claim was to a channel for the irrigation of fields the value of the claim was not the value of the fields but the detriment or injury the plaintiff would suffer if the right were negatived (t). In a Bombay case A sued B for possession under the Bombay Rent Act 2 of 1918. The rent of the portion occupied by B was Rs 275 per month. The High Court on appeal decreed A's suit. It was held that as the rent capitalized at 20 years' purchase amounted to upwards of Rs. 10,000, the decree involved indirectly a claim respecting property of the value of over Rs. 10,000, and that B was entitled to leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council (u). In a Lahore case, however, where A sued to eject B alleging that B was a tenant at-will, and B contended that he was a permanent tenant paying an annual rent of Rs. 1,200 the Court held that the issue in the suit, namely whether B was a permanent tenant or a tenant at-will did not involve any question respecting property of the value of Rs. 10,000 or upwards (v). Again when the subject matter of the suit was a widow's right of residence, the Bombay High Court held that the value of the claim was the value of the premises the appellant was required to vacate (u).

Where subject matter of suit not capable of valuation.

Where the matter is under the appealable value or is not capable of valuation.—In such a case, a party desirous of appealing to the Privy Council may apply for a certificate that the case is "a fit one for appeal" to His Majesty in Council under s 109, cl (c) (x). See notes to s 109, "Certificate as to fitness"

Decree of affirmance.

"Where the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below the Court passing such decree."—In this case it is not enough that the appeal involves some substantial question of law. It is also necessary that the amount of the subject matter of the suit and of the subject matter in dispute on appeal must be Rs 10,000 or upwards, or that the decree must involve some claim to property of like amount. The existence of a question of law of itself does not give a right of appeal in the ordinary course of procedure under this section (y). This is clear from the word "and" with which the last paragraph of this section begins

The Privy Council have held that the decision of the suit, and cannot, like statement of the grounds on which from this that in order to "affirm" appellate Court affirms the decree of the Court below, it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed. Thus where the decree of the appellate Court was that "the appeal be dismissed," but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact, it was held that the decision of the Court below was "affirmed" within the meaning of this section, and that no certificate should be granted unless the appeal involved a substantial question of law (z). Nor is it necessary in order to "affirm" the decision of the Court below that the finding security for costs (b) or for want of prosecution the appellants not having supplied their counsel with materials upon which to argue the appeal when it was called for hearing, is a decree 'affirming' the decision of the Court below (c)

The Calcutta Case of Sree Nath Roy v. Secretary of State (d) seemed to lay down the principle that a decree was a decree of affirmance if both the Courts were agreed as to the subject matter of the proposed appeal to the Privy Council. That was a case under the Land Acquisition Act and the applicant claimed Rs. 77,000 and odd as compensation, but the Collector awarded him Rs. 28,287. The Judge on reference to him upheld the Collector's award. The applicant then appealed to the High Court valuing the appeal at Rs. 49,000 and odd being the difference between the two sums. The High Court increased the amount of compensation by about Rs. 7,000. It was held that the decree of the High Court was an affirming decree and leave to appeal to the Privy Council was refused. But in Annapurnabai v. Rup Rao (e) A alleging that he was adopted by the senior widow of one Shanker sued the junior widow and another for possession of property of over Rs. 10,000 in value. The junior widow denied the adoption, and further, she claimed to be entitled to Rs. 3,000 per annum for her maintenance. The first Court held that the plaintiff's adoption was proved but decreed to the widow Rs. 800 per annum as maintenance. The Appellate Court increased the maintenance to Rs. 1,200 per annum but in all other respects affirmed the decision of the first Court. The defendants applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council but the application was rejected. The defendants then applied to the Privy Council for special leave to appeal. It was argued on behalf of the defendants that the value of the subject matter of the suit exceeded Rs. 10,000 as also did the subject matter of the proposed appeal, and that even if the maintenance alone was regarded as in dispute its value, having regard to the widow's prospects of life, exceeded Rs. 10,000. This contention was upheld and special leave to appeal was granted. It is true that the appeal was limited to the question of maintenance but that was because the petitioners desired to appeal only as to the amount of maintenance. Rankin, C. J., considers that this judgment of the Privy Council has the effect of overruling the particular application of the principle of Sree Nath Roy's case that only the subject matter of the appeal to the Privy Council is to be regarded when deciding whether the decree is or is not one of affirmance (f), but that it is not in itself of sufficient authority to justify the abandonment of the rule which had been acted upon that you must look to the substance and see what is the subject matter of the appeal to the Privy Council. In accordance with this rule it has been held that the decree is a decree of affirmance if the appellate Court agrees with the findings of the lower Court on the merits but varies the order as to costs (g) or as to interest (h) or allows a cross appeal modifying the decree (i). The Allahabad High Court had also held that if the decree varies the decree of the lower Court to the prejudice of the applicant it is not a decree of affirmance (j), but that it is a decree of affirmance if the variance is in favour of the applicant (k). A subsequent Full Bench case of the Allahabad High Court holds, following Annapurnabai's case that any modification prevents a decree from being one of affirmance (l).

In a suit by A against B a decree is passed in A's favour. B appeals from the decree but the appeal is dismissed by the lower appellate Court. B then appeals to the High

The Privy Council have held that the word 'decision' in this clause means merely the decision of the suit and cannot like the word 'judgment,' be defined as meaning the statement of the grounds on which the Court proceeds to pass the decree It follows from this that in order to 'affirm' the decision of the Court below it is sufficient if the appellate Court affirms the decree of the Court below, it need not also affirm the grounds of fact on which the judgment was passed Thus where the decree of the appellate Court was that "the appeal be dismissed, but the reasons given were not the same as those of the lower Court in respect of some matters of fact, it was held that the decision of the Court below was 'affirmed' within the meaning of this section, and that no certificate should be granted unless the appeal involved a substantial question of law (z) Nor is it necessary in order to 'affirm' the decision of the Court below that the finding of the appellate Court should coincide in terms with that of the Court below it is sufficient if the findings of fact of the two Courts are in effect the same (a) And it has been held that a decree of the High Court dismissing an appeal for the appellants failure to furnish

Court The appeal is heard by a single Judge of the High Court who reverses the decree of the lower appellate Court From this judgment 4 appeals to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent with the result that the judgment of the single Judge is affirmed by His Majesty in Council Here the Bench of two Judges of the High Court constituted by the two Judges is the lower appellate Court, and not the Court constituted by the single Judge of the High Court This therefore is a case in which the decree appealed from affirms the decision of the Court immediately below, and no leave to appeal can therefore be granted unless the appeal involves some substantial question of law The above result follows from the fact that the Code, makes no provision for an appeal within the High Court that is to say, from a single Judge of the High Court the right of appeal from the judgment of a single Judge of the High Court is conferred by cl 15 of the Letters Patent (m) But the Lahore High Court holds that in such a case the Court 'immediately below' is the Court of the single Judge and that the decree is not one of affirmance (n) as this seems to have been assumed by the Privy Council in an old case (o)

Judicial Committee and concurrent findings of facts

Rule of Judicial Committee in cases of concurrent findings of fact when the appeal before the Committee falls on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted—The Judicial Committee has undoubtedly the power as a Court of review to review the concurrent findings of facts of the lower Court, though the appeal before it may fail on the question of law on which leave to appeal was granted But as a general rule the Committee will not interfere with these findings on the ground that where the question in one of fact, it is a question of the weight and credibility of evidence upon which a Court of review can never be in quite as good a position to form an opinion as the Court of first instance (p) The Privy Council have said that the object of the rule is to discourage bringing before the Board issues of fact on which the appellant has failed in two Courts and the rule should not be departed from unless its enforcement would work obvious injustice or the violation of some rule of procedure (q) In Umrao Begam v Irshad Husain (r) Lord Hobhouse in delivering the judgment of the Board said "question is not only a question of fact, but it is one which embraces a great number of facts whose significance is best appreciated by those who are most familiar with Indian manners and customs Their Lordships would be specially and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the said rule (s) "It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference" (t) The circumstance that the trial Judge based his findings on oral evidence, while the finding of the Appellate Court was based on documents, is not a ground for interference (u) Sometimes the nature of the question may be such (as where the question is whether a deed of gift was executed by a Mahomedan under apprehension of death) that the Judicial Committee will not interfere with concurrent findings of the lower Courts on that question even where the evidence is such as to justify either view (v) 'The rule [above referred to] however, is not an absolute rule, it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight, according to the circumstances of the case, and no doubt the fact that the Courts have differed on some important but subordinate questions is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower Courts should be reviewed in detail' (w) Thus concurrent findings of facts have been allowed to be disputed where the question of fact appeared to be a good deal mixed up with law (x) They have also been allowed to be disputed where the decisions though ultimately one of fact, turned upon the admissibility or value of many subordinate facts, and involved the construction of documents and other questions of law (y) In a recent case their Lordships of the Privy Council said 'If it appears that underlying findings of fact there are questions of law on which the findings proceeded or that there is a case that the judges misdirected themselves, then the rule as to concurrent findings not being the subject of appeal does not apply to the exclusion of such grounds of law as are alluded to (z)

Where a trial Judge bases his judgment upon a finding of fact and two of three Judges constituting the appellate Court agree with the finding and conclusion, the third Judge arriving at the same result upon a different finding of fact there are concurrent findings to which the rule of practice of the Board referred to above applies (a)

The principle of concurrent findings of fact does not apply where the case is one of no evidence. The reason is that a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law (b) Nor does it apply to a finding as to the existence of a custom, since that is a matter of mixed law and fact (c) Nor does it apply where the question is one of inference from documents for that is a question of law (d) But if the documents are not documents of title or statements intended to have effect as claims, compromises or surrenders of legal rights but merely records of payments the construction of documents however obscure, is a question of fact and the Privy Council will not interfere if the findings are concurrent (e)

Substantial question of law

The appeal must involve some substantial question of law—No appeal lies to the Privy Council from an appellate decree when there are concurrent findings of the appellate Court and of the Court below upon questions of fact unless the appeal involves some substantial question of law (f) To grant leave to appeal on the

Decree or order—In cl (a) the words 'decree or order' have been substituted for the word 'judgment' which occurred in the corresponding sec 597 of the Code of 1882

Appeal from a decree of the District Court

Calcutta case (e) In the course of the judgment the learned Judge said — Section 111 of the Code however definitely prohibits an appeal to the Privy Council from a single Judge and to this extent overrides clause 39 of the Letters Patent. The section is not a mere provision that nothing in the previous section shall be deemed to give a right of appeal from the decision of a single Judge. The provisions of clause (a) of section 111 may have been motivated originally by the existence of the right of Letters Patent appeal [cf Sabhapathi Chetti v Narayanasami Chetti] (f) or by the opinion that it is not reasonable in Indian cases that the Privy Council should be called upon to decide cases until a Bench has dealt with them. But in any case the effect of section 111 upon clause 39 of the Letters Patent cannot now be controlled by such considerations [Satyana nara jana Varaprasada v Venkata Bhasya Karla] (g). It appears to me therefore that the new clause in the Letters Patent takes away in all second appeals decided by a single Judge (without his giving a certificate that the case is a fit one for appeal) the right to go to the Privy Council under the ordinary law though the right of the Judicial Committee to give special leave is not of course affected. That right was a limited and a qualified right but such as it was it was open to the party prior to the 14th January 1928.

PART VIII.

Reference, Review and Revision

113. [S 617] Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, any Court may state a case and refer the same for the opinion of the High Court, and the High Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit

Reference to High Court

Reference to High Court—See O 46 below

Benares State Court.—The High Court of Allahabad has no power to entertain a reference on an application submitted to His Highness the Maharaja of Benares, in a civil case from the Benares State Court (A)

114. [S 623] Subject as aforesaid, any person considering himself aggrieved—

Review

- (a) by a decree or order from which an appeal is allowed by this Code, but from which no appeal has been preferred
- (b) by a decree or order from which no appeal is allowed by this Code, or
- (c) by a decision on a reference from a Court of Small Causes, may apply for a review of judgment to the Court which passed the decree or made the order, and the Court may make such order thereon as it thinks fit

See notes to O 47 r 1 below As to rules of procedure see O 47 below

115. [S 622.] The High Court may call for the record of any case which has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and in which no appeal lies thereto, and if such subordinate Court appears—

Revision

- (a) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested, or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

Code of 1882, s. 622.—This section corresponds with sec 622 of the Code of 1882. There is no material alteration in the section

Limits of revisional jurisdiction.—The jurisdiction exercised by the High Court under this section is called Revisional Jurisdiction. The powers of the High Court under this section can only be invoked in cases in which no appeal lies to the High Court provided the case has been decided by any Court subordinate to such High Court and such subordinate Court appears—

- (1) to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, or
- (2) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, or
- (3) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity

The High Court has no power to interfere in revision under this section except in the three cases mentioned above. Whether a particular order is expedient or not is not a ground on which the High Court can interfere under this section (1). Further, in the exercise of revisional powers, it is not the province of the High Court to enter into the merits of the evidence, it has only to see whether the requirements of the law have been duly and properly obeyed by the Court whose order is the subject of revision and whether the irregularity as to failure or exercise of jurisdiction is such as to justify interference with the order (2). If the High Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction, of investigation and of command have been satisfied by the inferior Court, it should not substitute its own appreciation of evidence, or its own judgment thereon, for the determination of the inferior Court, in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of the inferior Court (3).

Exercise of revisional jurisdiction is discretionary.—The section gives a discretionary power to the High Court to interfere or not (4). The High Court will not usually interfere if the result of an irregularity of the lower Court has been to promote justice (5). In a case where the District Court acted outside the scope of its jurisdiction in allowing an appeal and reversing an erroneous order of a Munsiff, the High Court declined to make an order which would have the effect of re-establishing the Munsiff's decision (6). The High Court will not act under this section if the matter is sub judice in an appeal filed by another party (7).

High Courts' powers of superintendence.—A case may not fall under this section, and yet it may fall under sec 15 of the Charter Act, 1861, now sec 107 of the Government of India Act 1915.

Certiorari.—The provisions of this section are not exhaustive. Cases may be imagined though rare ones which do not fall under this section. For such cases it cannot be said that the powers of the High Courts which have inherited the ordinary or extraordinary jurisdiction of the Supreme Courts to issue writs of certiorari have been taken away by the provisions of this section (p) The High Court of Madras issued a writ of certiorari on the Board of Revenue on the ground that though it is an executive body yet it may have judicial functions to perform (q)

Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827.—The High Court of Bombay has power independently of sec 115 of the Code, to call for the proceedings of any subordinate civil Court and to issue orders thereon under Bombay Regulation 2 of 1827, Ch 1, s. 5 (2) (r)

"In which no appeal lies".—The High Court cannot act under this section in any case in which an appeal lies to that Court (s) Nor can an application for revision be entertained if a second appeal to the High Court is available (t) On the other hand the Rangoon High Court, in an exceptional case held that it could revise an order of a Subordinate Judge although an appeal lay to the District Court, and a second appeal to the High Court (u)

Memorandum of appeal may be treated as application for revision and vice versa.—Where an appeal is preferred in a case in which no appeal lies, the High Court may in a proper case treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision and deal with it on that footing (v) Similarly if an application for revision is made in a case in which an appeal lies, the application may be converted into an appeal (w)

Interlocutory orders.—To give the High Court jurisdiction to revise an interlocutory order it is necessary among other things that it must be a 'case decided' with in the meaning of this section, and, further that no appeal lies to the High Court from that order For the purposes of this section interlocutory orders fall into two classes, namely—

A Those from which an appeal lies under s 104 (1) These are orders made by the Court of first instance

B Those from which no appeal lies These may be—

(a) orders made by the Court of first instance from which no appeal is allowed under s 104 (1) or

(b) orders passed in first appeal from which no second appeal lies having regard to the provisions of s 104 (2)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under class A the High Court has no jurisdiction to revise them as they are appealable orders (x)

As regards interlocutory orders falling under class B there is a conflict of opinion whether they are subject to revision under this section The conflict turns mainly on the word case and the word may in the section Does the word case include an issue or part of a case? If it does not, the passing of an interlocutory order is not deciding a "case," and it is not capable of revision. It has been held by some Courts that the word "case" includes part of a case, and by others that it does not.

Assuming that the word "case" includes part of a case, in other words, includes interlocutory orders, and assuming further, that the other conditions laid down by the section are fulfilled, there is no doubt that the High Court can interfere in revision with such orders. There is also no doubt that though the High Court can revise such orders, it is not bound to do so, for the section says that the High Court may call for the record of any case, it being discretionary with the Court to call for the record. The matter being one of discretion the question has arisen (and on this point there is another divergence of opinion)—in what cases is it proper for the Court in the exercise of its discretion to revise interlocutory orders? To appreciate the different views on the subject, it is necessary to bear in mind that though an interlocutory order may not be appealable under sec 104, it may be challenged in the appeal from the final decree under sec 105 provided the order is one 'affecting the decision of the case'. Again there are some interlocutory orders from which an injured party is given a right of suit to set aside the order as stated in the note below, Alternative remedy by way of suit or otherwise". It has been held in some cases that if a party aggrieved by an interlocutory order has the alternative remedy of challenging the order in an appeal from the final decree under sec 105, or if he has the alternative remedy by way of suit, the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with such order, the power to interfere being exercisable only where there is no other remedy. For instance, no appeal lies from an order of a District Court made on appeal granting a temporary injunction [s 104 (2)], further, any error in such order cannot be objected to in an appeal from the final decree as it cannot possibly affect the decision of the case within the meaning of sec 105, nor does a suit lie to set aside such an order, the High Court may therefore interfere in revision with the order (y). Similarly where a Court asks a plaintiff to pay additional Court fee before his suit can be entertained, the High Court may interfere in revision with the order as the order in effect amounts to a denial of jurisdiction (z). But why, it has been asked, and asked pertinently in a large majority of cases, should the discretion of the High Court be fettered with such a hard and fast rule? Why should the High Court refuse to interfere in every case in which the injured party has another remedy open to him? Why should not the High Court revise an order even if there is another remedy open to the injured party, if its non interference might lead to failure of justice or irreparable injury? This last consideration has weighed with many judges and it has accordingly been held in some cases that the High Court may in a proper case interfere in revision even if there is another remedy open to the aggrieved party. With these prefatory remarks the views of the different High Courts on the subject may now be considered.

Before a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court to be presently noted it was held by that Court that interlocutory orders were not subject to revision, first, because an interlocutory order cannot be said to be a "case" within the meaning of this section, and, secondly, because a party aggrieved by such order, though he cannot appeal from the order, has another remedy open to him under sec 105, namely, to make the order a ground of appeal from the final decree in the suit (a). In Budhu Lal v Mewa Ram (b) decided in 1921, a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court held that the word "case exercise of its discretion interfere only in cases where there would otherwise be no remedy or whether it may interfere even if the injured party has another remedy open to him by an appeal from the final decree under sec 105 or by way of suit. On the one hand, it was laid down by a Full Bench in Shiva Nathaji v Joma (l) decided in 1883, that though the High Court will not ordinarily interfere in revision with interlocutory orders where the aggrieved party has another remedy open to him either by an appeal from the final decree under sec 105 or by suit, it will interfere if the appeal would manifestly be ineffectual and non interference would result in a defeat of law and a grave wrong to the aggrieved party. On the other hand, a Divisional Bench consisting of Sargent, C J., and Candy, J., held in Motilal v Nana (m), decided in 1894, that the High Court should not in the exercise of its discretion interfere in revision with interlocutory orders except in cases where the injured party had no other remedy open to him. No reference was made in the judgment to the Full Bench decision in Shiva Nathaji's case. The decision in Motilal v. Nana was disapproved by a Divisional Bench of the same High Court in Secretary of State v Narsimhai (n), decided in 1924 and the Court followed the principle laid down in the Full Bench ruling. In the course of his judgment Koyajee, J., observed that the section did not make the absence of another remedy a necessary condition of its applicability. But in a case decided in 1928 another Divisional Bench distinguished Secretary of State v Narsimhai on the ground that it involved a question of jurisdiction and said that the overwhelming balance of authority is in support of the view that a finding on an interlocutory matter followed by an order is not a case decided within the meaning of sec 115 and that the High Court will not interfere in a case where the party aggrieved has another remedy open to him by way of appeal (o).

The distinction between the decisions of the High Courts of Allahabad and Lahore on the one hand and those of the other High Courts on the other hand as to the meaning of the term "case" is brought out by the following case. A institutes a suit against B in Court X. One of the issues in the suit is whether Court X has jurisdiction to try the suit. The Court holds that it has and that the suit must proceed. B applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of Court X. Has the High Court power to interfere result in unnecessary waste of time and money.

As regards orders made on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis, a distinction has been made by the Allahabad High Court between an order granting the application and an order rejecting the application. An order rejecting the application, it has been held, amounts to a decision of the case and is therefore open to revision, but an order granting the application is not a decision of the case, but a mere interlocutory exceptional cases " (k) Thus where the lower Court refused the application of a decreeholder for rateable distribution under sec 73 on the ground that there was another property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered on revision under this section, though the applicant had clearly a remedy by suit Miller, J, said "I do not depart from the view . . . that where a party has a remedy elsewhere than in the High Court, the High Court should not except in special cases interfere under [this section] But here we have a case in which there is no doubt as to the rights of the parties, and no remedy if I do not interfere, except by a suit to which there can be no defence, and which therefore would merely multiply proceedings In such a case the lesser evil, at any rate, is interference under [this section]" (l) When the Court on an erroneous view of the law refused to proceed with the suit until the Court fee was paid, the Madras High Court interfered with the interlocutory order as this would give more complete and efficacious relief and avoid unnecessary hardship and multiplicity of proceedings (j) In a Patna case, Manuk, J, said "When the High Court can by interfering under section 115 in appropriate cases terminate the litigation the mere fact that another remedy by suit only lies should not per se be a reason for non interference" (k) The following are instances of exceptional cases which have been held to justify revision although a remedy by suit was available an order refusing to inquire into an objection to an attachment when the applicant was under the impression that the attachment had ceased and that it was not necessary to file a suit under O 21, r 63 (l), an order dispossessing a judgment debtor under O 21, r 98, although the decree holder purchaser had agreed to allow him to remain in possession (m), a decree under sec 9 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877, when the Court had no jurisdiction at all, the summary suit being barred by the provisions of the Agra Tenancy Act (n), when the Court actually refused jurisdiction to entertain an application for review based on an allegation of fraud (o) Accordingly the Allahabad High Court interfered in revision with an order refusing an amendment, although the order could under sec 105 have been made a ground of objection in appeal (ol). Exceptional cases are so numerous that a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court has said that it cannot be laid down as a general proposition that the High Court has no power of interference when there is another remedy by way of suit and that each case must be considered on its merits (p)

Whether High Court may of its own motion call for record—The powers of revision given by this section are very wide, and the High Court may of its own motion call for any record under this section, if it appears desirable so to do to that Court (q) It is not necessary to the exercise of its powers under this section that it should be put into motion by the party aggrieved by the proceeding complained of It has been so held by the High Courts of Calcutta, Allahabad and Madras (r) In a Bombay case, however, where a Collector applied to the High Court to revise a decision of a Mamlatdar, the High Court declined to interfere, stating that in so doing it

Trust Tribunal acting as a Court under the Land Acquisition Act is subject to revision (l) A District Judge acting under s 57 of the Madras Local Boards Act 14 of 1920 has been held to be a Court within the meaning of this section (l) In this case it was said that the use of the term 'Judge' instead of 'Court' is not sufficient to imply that he acts as a persona designata. But in the case of Sholapur Municipality v Tuljaram (n) Patkar, J, said that when a Judge or presiding officer of a Court, as distinguished from the Court itself, is directed to perform any function of an authority created by statute he should be considered a persona designata and not a Court

The High Court of Kumaun is not a Court subordinate to the High Court of Allahabad (n) But the Court of the Resident at Aden is subordinate to the High Court of Bombay in reference to cases to be stated by the Resident for the decision of the High Court under s 8 of the Aden Courts Act 2 of 1864 (o) The Bombay High Court has therefore jurisdiction to revise an order of the Judicial Assistant at Aden (p) His Britannic Majesty's Courts in Zanzibar are also subordinate to the High Court of Bombay (q) A Collector exercising judicial functions under the Bombay Mamlatdar's Courts Act II of 1906 is a Court within the meaning of this section (r) And so is a Civil Court acting or purporting to act under the provisions of s 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 20 of 1863 (s) It has been held by the High Courts of Madras, Allahabad and Bombay that when an application is made to the Collector for a reference to the Civil Court under s 18 of the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, and the application is rejected the Collector does not act as a Court and his order is not subject to revision by the High Court (t) A contrary view has been taken by the Calcutta (u) and Lucknow (v) High Courts The Patna (w) and Calcutta (x) High Courts have held that a Collector acting under the second proviso to s 49 of that Act is a 'Court,' and an order made by him refusing to refer to the Civil Court a question under that proviso is subject to revision by the High Court The High Court of Calcutta has held that a Collector acting under s 11 of that Act is not a "Court" within the meaning of this section (y) is more than Rupees five lacs as provided by sec 7 of the Oudh Courts Act 4 of 1925, is not a subordinate Court to the Chief Court which is the High Court referred to therein and, therefore, no revision lies against its order (a)

"Jurisdiction"—Jurisdiction has been explained in the notes to s 21. The expression "jurisdiction" is not confined to the jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal. A Court may have jurisdiction to entertain a suit or appeal, and yet it may have no jurisdiction to pass a particular order in the suit or appeal. If it does so, the case is one under clause (a) of the section, and the High Court is entitled to interfere in revision. This follows from the rulings of the Judicial Committee in Lachmi Narain v Balmalund (b), dealt with in the note below. 'The same topic continued,' and in Birj Mohun v Rai Uma Nath (c)

Exercise by Court of jurisdiction not vested in it by law—If a Court assumes jurisdiction which, by reason of the pecuniary or territorial limits of the jurisdiction of such Court or by reason of the subject matter of the suit or other proceedings instituted in it, is not vested in it by law, the High Court to which such Court is subordinate has power under clause (a) to interfere in revision under this section. It will not, however, do so unless the facts from which absence of jurisdiction may be inferred are patent upon the face of the record (d). Similarly the High Court has power to interfere in revision under clause (a), if the lower Court decrees a suit for possession under s 9 of the Specific Relief Act when the plaintiff has not been dispossessed otherwise than or if the lower Court demands search fee on an application for copies of records in addition to the stamps for copies (i). When an insolvency Court ordered a distribution of assets after the insolvency had been annulled, the Court was held to have acted without jurisdiction (j). The rules of the Calcutta High Court empower a single Judge to hear revisional applications in cases of the value of Rs 1000 and so when a single Judge granted a rule for revision of an order in a suit of more than that value the rule was discharged for want of jurisdiction (k).

For other cases under this head see notes below. The same topic continues, "and 'Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court'."

Failure to exercise jurisdiction—Where a Court having jurisdiction in a matter declines jurisdiction, clause (b) applies and when a Court refuses to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law under a misapprehension of the law or an erroneous construction of a statute the High Court will interfere in revision (l). Thus where a Court has jurisdiction to accept a plaint (m) or to execute a decree (n), or to give a judgment (o), but refuses to accept the plaint or to execute the decree or to give a judgment on the ground that it has no jurisdiction, the High Court will interfere under this section. When a Subordinate Judge refused to allow an assignee to execute a decree will be recorded, this was said to be no order at all and the Court was directed in revision to hear and dispose of it on the merits (g). Similarly where a Court refused to confirm a sale under s 312 of the Code of 1882 [now O 21, r 92] believing that it had no power to do so if the purchaser objected to the sale on the ground of misrepresentation, it was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the case was one in which the Court had failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, and that the decision was therefore subject to revision under the present section (r). Again when a Court refused to enter an application to set aside an ex parte decree under O 34 r 6, on the erroneous ground that it was an execution proceeding the order was subject to revision (s). The rejection of an application for fixing a standard rent on the ground that the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act, 1920, were not applicable to the case, is a refusal by the Rent Controller to exercise a jurisdiction conferred upon him by the Act, and is accordingly a proper case for interference under this section (t). An order returning a memorandum of appeal for presentation to another Court is also open to revision (u). Interference under this section is also appropriate where a Court has no discretionary power to refuse a relief but refuses the relief, believing that it has a discretionary power to do so. Thus where a Court refused the application of a decree holder for a rateable distribution under s 73 though according to its own finding he was clearly entitled to such distribution on the ground that there was other property of the judgment debtor available for the satisfaction of his claim, the High Court of Madras interfered under this section (v). But where a Court has a discretion in a matter, a wrong exercise of such discretion is not a proper ground for interference under this section (w).

For other cases under this head, see notes below, 'The same topic continued, and Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court

Where a Court in the exercise of its jurisdiction has acted illegally or with material irregularity—Cl (c) of the section contemplates cases other than those referred to in cls (a) and (b). This clause clearly excludes clause (b) for a Court cannot refuse to exercise its jurisdiction and act in the exercise of it with material irregularity (x). The clause refers to cases where the Court having jurisdiction and exercising it has acted illegally or with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction (y). The words 'acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity,' have given rise to a conflict of decisions. It is therefore best first to state how much is settled law, and then to deal with the various interpretations put on the words 'illegally' and 'with material irregularity' by the various High Courts.

What is not illegality or material irregularity—It is settled even if it be on a point of law that where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it determines that question, it cannot be said that it has acted illegally or with material irregularity because it has come to an erroneous decision on a question of fact or even of law.—The leading case on the subject is Amir Hassan Khan v Sheo Baksh Singh (z).

decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in 1884. In that case it was laid down by their Lordships that where a Court has jurisdiction to decide the question before it and in fact decides the question, it cannot be regarded as acting in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, merely because its decision is erroneous. The mere fact that the decision of the Court is wrong affords no ground for the interference of the High Court under this section. In the course of the judgment, their Lordships said: "The question then is, did the Judges of the Lower Courts in this case, in the exercise of their jurisdiction, act illegally or with material irregularity? It appears that they had perfect jurisdiction to decide the question which was before them [namely, whether the suit was barred as res judicata], and they did decide it. Whether they decided it rightly or wrongly, they had jurisdiction to decide the case, and even if they decided wrongly, they did not exercise their jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity." Following this decision, it has been held that the High Court will not interfere under this section, merely because the lower Court allowed an application which was barred by limitation (a), or wrongly decided that a suit was barred by limitation (b), or that it was barred as res judicata (c), or because the lower Court proceeded upon an erroneous construction of the sections of an Act (d), or misunderstood the effect of a document in evidence (e), or excluded evidence which it ought to have admitted (f) except where such admission was in direct contravention of a statutory provision (g), or held, though incorrectly, that there was no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties to a suit or proceeding (h), or that it was not necessary to give notice to a railway company under sec. 77 of the Railways Act (i), or that the procedure under sec. 61 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act was not followed (j), or that an application to set aside a sale was not timed barred (k), or that it wrongly applied secs. 130 and 131 of the Transfer of Property Act (l). Similarly no revision lies from an order passed in appeal remanding a case under O. 41, r. 23 below (m), though such order may be erroneous in law. In these cases the Court considered the question and came to an erroneous conclusion. But if the Court does not adjudicate upon the question and entertains an application which is on the face of it barred by limitation it acts with material irregularity and its order is revisable (n). When however as in the cases previously cited the Court has considered a question which it has jurisdiction to decide and comes to an erroneous conclusion that is not open to revision as a mere error of law is not an illegality within the meaning of the section. In such cases the High Court might well have said in the words of their Lordships of the Privy Council in another case (o): "It [the lower Court] made a sad mistake it is true, but a Court has jurisdiction to decide wrong as well as right." The point was further emphasized by their

Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v Vasudeva (p) Referring to this section their Lordships said —

“It will be observed that the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non exercise of it or the illegal assumption of it The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved” (q)

The rule laid down in Balakrishna’s case has been interpreted, or rather applied differently by different High Courts This may be explained by an illustration A applies under O 21, r 89, to set aside a sale in execution of a decree The lower Court places a wrong interpretation on r 89, and holds that A is not a person entitled to apply under that rule, and the application is dismissed A then applies to the High Court for a revision of the order of the lower Court Can the High Court interfere in revision? It has been held by the Patna High Court (r) that it can, the reason given being that the case is one of a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested by law in the lower Court, and therefore within this section In the course of his judgment Mulla, J said “The Court’s decision upon the point whether the applicant has the necessary legal character is clearly a question involving jurisdiction An erroneous decision on a question of law or fact after jurisdiction has been once legally assumed would not be a ground for interference under section 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but if the decision is the very basis and foundation of jurisdiction in its limited sense as distinguished from powers it at once comes within the purview of the section The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balakrishna v Vasudeva is in my opinion authority for this view” The same view has been taken by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court (s) These decisions have been dissented from by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court (t) In the Allahabad case Banerji, J, after referring to Balakrishna’s case, said “In the present case the Court was competent to determine whether [A] was entitled to make an application under O 21, r 89, and it had jurisdiction to decide that question, and it decided it adversely to [A] The Court may have been wrong in its decision, but it cannot be said that in the exercise of its jurisdiction it acted illegally or with material irregularity in the sense in which those words have been interpreted by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case to which I have referred and in earlier cases decided by their Lordships” The substantial point of difference between these two divergent views is that the Patna and Madras High Courts treat the refusal by the lower Court to entertain the application as a refusal to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law while the High Court of Allahabad regards the refusal as no more than a decision, though erroneous on a point of law in the exercise of the lower Court’s jurisdiction There is no difference of opinion between these Courts on the point that where the lower Court assumes jurisdiction or refuses jurisdiction on an erroneous construction of a statute, the High Court can interfere in revision The difference arises on the question—is it a case of a refusal to exercise jurisdiction or a case merely of a wrong decision on a point of law in the exercise of the Court’s jurisdiction? According to the Patna and Madras High Courts, it is the former, according to the Allahabad High Court, it is the latter

Following its Full Bench ruling, the Madras High Court has held that though an erroneous decision on a point of limitation is not a ground for interference under this section, the High Court can and will interfere if the Small Cause Court refuses to entertain an application for retrial of a suit tried by a single judge of that

Court, where such refusal proceeds on a wrong view of a question of limitation (u) It has similarly been held by that Court that where a District Judge, on an erroneous construction of a statutory rule, assumes jurisdiction to declare whether a person elected as a President of a Local Board is duly elected or not, and assuming such jurisdiction declares his election to be void, the High Court has the power to interfere under this section (t) The same High Court interfered in revision where a Subordinate Judge misconstrued the legal position in the case and refused to release the property under attachment as he should have done (w), also where the result of an erroneous decision was likely to perpetuate the error and to give rise to a multiplicity of suits not for one year but for all time (x)

The High Court of Calcutta has held that where a Judge has misdirected himself as to the meaning and effect of a section or of a rule under the Code, the High Court can interfere in revision Thus where a plaintiff was allowed to withdraw his suit under O 23, r 1 with liberty to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action on the ground of a formal defect in the frame of the suit after the suit had been heard and decided against him on the merits, the High Court interfered in revision (y) In another case the High Court interfered in revision on the ground that the Munsif had not directed his attention properly to the provisions of O 21, r 60 (z) A Presidency Small Cause Court has only revisional jurisdiction under sec 38 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, and when the Court purporting to act under that section interfered on a question of fact the Calcutta High Court held that it had no jurisdiction to make the order (a) The Calcutta High Court also interfered when the lower Court settled the share which a co sharer landlord was entitled to pre empt arbitrarily and without regard to any principle (b) The Oudh Court interfered in revision where the lower Court allowed the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit, the object of the withdrawal being to produce evidence in the new suit which he had omitted to produce at the right time (c) The High Court of Rangoon has held that if the lower Court fails to take into account some proposition of law or some material fact in evidence it acts illegally and its decision may be revised by the High Court but that if the lower Court has applied its mind to the case and duly considered the facts and the law applicable then although its decision may be erroneous the High Court cannot interfere in revision (d)

The same topic continued—The decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case presupposes jurisdiction in the Court whose decision is sought to be revised on the ground that it is erroneous Hence the principle of that decision does not apply where a Court erroneously assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law (e) Thus if a Court proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a section of an Act assumes a jurisdiction which is not vested in it by law, the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the decree of the lower Court as one passed without jurisdiction (f) Similarly if a Court wrongly decides that a suit is of a civil nature and entertains the suit on that basis the decision is open to revision under clause (a) of this section for no civil Court is competent to entertain a suit which is not of a civil nature (g) see sec 9 above Likewise if a Court, proceeding upon an erroneous construction of a statute or upon a misapprehension of the law declines to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it by law, the High Court has the power to interfere under clause (b) of this section (h) These really are cases under clauses (a) and (b) of the present section They are not cases under clause (c) which is the clause now under consideration The reason why these cases are mentioned here is that it was contended in those cases that as the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it had proceeded upon an error of law the High Court had no power to interfere under this section and the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was invoked in support of that contention But the High Courts held that if the case came under either clause (a) or clause (b) it was immaterial that the assumption of jurisdiction or the refusal to exercise it proceeded upon an error of law The High Court also pointed out that the basis of the decision in Amir Hassan Khan's case was that the lower Court had jurisdiction to determine the question before it and that it had determined it and all that that case decided was that an erroneous decision of a case in the exercise of the Court's jurisdiction was no ground for interference under this section

A Court has no power to dismiss a suit after the decree is passed in the suit If it does so the question arises whether the case is one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court or one of illegality or material irregularity In Lachmi Narain v. Balmakund (i) the Judicial Committee held that the case was one of exercise of jurisdiction not vested in the Court In that case the High Court on appeal passed a decree by consent for a partition upon certain terms and remitted the suit to the Subordinate Judge for disposal under the decree The plaintiff failed to appear on the day appointed by the Subordinate Judge to proceed with the matter and the Judge dismissed the suit under O 17 r 2 and O 9 r 8 The plaintiff applied to the High Court in revision The High Court decided that the case came both under clause (a) and clause (c) of this section and set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge and ordered the case to be restored to his file The defendants appealed from this order to the Privy Council on the ground that the High Court had no power to interfere in revision Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the High Court and said Their Lordships do not think it necessary to determine that the case came under para (c) of sec 115 But they think that the order which the Subordinate Judge made was one which he had not jurisdiction to make The order of the Subordinate Judge was not merely wrong in law, it was an order which he had no jurisdiction to make

Besides the cases mentioned above there are cases in which the action of the lower Court has been held not to amount to illegality or material irregularity, e.g., failure to important (f)

What is illegality or material irregularity—Amir Hassan Khan's case decides what is not an illegality or material irregularity What is it then which does constitute an illegality or material irregularity within the meaning of this section? The Courts have taken Amir Hassan Khan's case as the key to the solution of this question, but at different Judges have put different interpretations upon the case there are many conflicting decisions as to the meaning of the words of which the following are the leading examples —

1 The words "acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity" refer only to an error of jurisdiction (m) and apply only to cases of the kind contemplated by cl. (a) and (b) of this section (m). As against this view it has been said that the words in question did not occur in the Code of 1877, that they were first introduced by the amending Act of 1879, that errors of jurisdiction had already been provided for by the first two clauses of the section, and that the words in question must refer therefore to something other than errors of jurisdiction (n).

2 The words refer to errors of procedure only as distinguished from errors of law (o). This view proceeds mainly on the word "acted". In a Calcutta case Jenkins C.J. said: "It appears to me that section 113 can only be called in aid when the failure of justice (if any) has been due to one or other of the faults of procedure indicated in that section. If there was an error committed [by the Small Cause Court Judge] it was an error of law and not of procedure, and in my opinion Mr. Justice Fletcher had no power to interfere." (p) This view is supported by the recent decision of the Privy Council that it is a material irregularity to decide a case in the absence of a necessary party (q).

3 The words apply to cases where there is a wilful disregard or conscious violation by a judge of a rule of law or procedure (r). As against this view it has been said that it engrafts upon the Privy Council ruling a qualification to the effect that the High Court can interfere under the present section if the erroneous decision is the result of conscious violation by the lower Court of a rule of law or procedure, and that the distinction is in no way warranted by the language of the section (s). To this it is replied that if the section did not apply to cases where a Judge consciously violated a rule of law or procedure, a lower Court might, with impunity, wilfully disregard the decisions of the High Court, or even of the Privy Council (t).

4 The words apply to cases where the decision complained of is vitiated by a gross and palpable error (u). According to this view, a mistake, though of law, would, if gross and palpable, give jurisdiction to the Court under this section. But this view runs counter to the Privy Council decision (t).

5 The words "acted illegally" do not merely imply the committing of an error of procedure such as the expression "acted with material irregularity does". Those words have relation to gross and palpable errors of Subordinate Courts resulting in grave injustice (w).

It will not serve any useful purpose to discuss these conflicting views. Suffice to say, as observed by the Judicial Committee in Balakrishna v. Vasudeva (x), that "the section applies to jurisdiction alone, the irregular exercise or non exercise of it, or the illegal assumption of it. The section is not directed against conclusions of law or fact in which the question of jurisdiction is not involved". See note above, "Jurisdiction".

It is an illegality to frame an issue on a point of fact expressly admitted by the defendant and to dismiss the suit on the ground that the fact is not proved (y) Similarly it is an illegality, if a Court passes a decree on an unstamped hundi. The Stamp Act expressly provides that an unstamped hundi shall not be acted upon (z) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s 35] It is an illegality, if the appellate Court calls in question the admissibility of a document not duly stamped after the same has been admitted in evidence in the Court of first instance, such a course is manifestly against the provisions of the Stamp Act by which it is enacted that when an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not be called in question at any stage of the same suit (a) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s 35] It is also an illegality to pass a decree where there is no evidence at all to support it (b) or where the evidence is obviously valueless (c) or to decide a case on personal inspection of the subject matter of the suit ignoring the evidence on record (d) It is an illegality to attach in execution of a decree the tools of an artisan contrary to sec 60 of the Code (e), or to attach money in a provident fund regulated by the Provident Funds Act (f) It is an illegality when the Court dismissed an application to set aside a sale under O 21, r 89, merely because the names of all the purchasers had not been shewn in the application (g) It is also an illegality to include in a decree costs which are not legally taxable (h)

Wrong decision of lower appellate Court as to jurisdiction of trial Court —

The question to be considered under this head is whether the High Court has jurisdiction to interfere under this section where the lower appellate Court erroneously decides in the exercise of its admitted jurisdiction as an appellate Court that the Court of first instance had or had not jurisdiction to entertain a suit. Cases of this kind arise when a Court of first instance returns a plaint on the ground that it has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and the lower appellate Court affirms the order of the Court of first instance or sets aside the order. Has the High Court jurisdiction in such a case to revise the order of the lower appellate Court? On this point the decisions of the Allahabad High Court are not altogether consistent. In some cases (y) it was held that the error of the appellate Court was in the exercise of its jurisdiction to hear the appeal and that therefore its order is not open to revision. But even in these cases the High Court reversed the order of the Court of first instance although it might have been contended that that order was merged in the order of the lower appellate Court (z). In other cases the Allahabad High Court has held that the order of the lower appellate Court erroneously deciding that the Court of first instance should take cognizance of a case it has no jurisdiction to try (a), or should not take cognizance of a case it is competent to try (b) is open to revision for it would be anomalous if an order made by a District Court in its original jurisdiction were open to revision but not when made in its appellate jurisdiction. The Calcutta High Court held that the order of the lower appellate Court is open to revision (c), though an earlier case took the opposite view (d). In Bombay cases where the lower appellate Court confirmed the order of the Court of first instance the orders of both Courts were reversed (e). The Madras High Court holds that the order of the lower appellate Court is open to revision (f).

Ex parte decree—The Calcutta High Court interfered in revision when the lower Court professing to act under sec. 151 set aside an ex parte decree when no case under O. 9, r. 13, had been made out (g). The Allahabad High Court also interfered in such a case on the ground that the lower Court had no jurisdiction outside the provisions

Having noted the different interpretations put upon the words in question, we proceed to note some of the decisions reported on the subject

It is an "illegality" to frame an issue on a point of fact expressly admitted by the defendant and to dismiss the suit on the ground that the fact is not proved (y). Similarly it is an illegality, if a Court passes a decree on an unstamped hundi. The Stamp Act expressly provides that an unstamped hundi shall not be acted upon (z) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s. 35]. It is an illegality, if the appellate Court calls in question the admissibility of a document not duly stamped after the same has been admitted in evidence in the Court of first instance, such a course is manifestly against the provisions of the Stamp Act by which it is enacted that when an instrument has been admitted in evidence, such admission shall not be called in question at any stage of the same suit (a) [see Stamp Act II of 1899, s. 35]. It is also an illegality to pass a decree where there is no evidence at all to support it (b) or where the evidence is obviously valueless (c), or to decide a case on personal inspection of the subject matter of the suit ignoring the evidence on record (d). It is an illegality to attach in execution of a decree the tools of an artisan contrary to sec. 60 of the Code (e), or to attach money in a provident fund regulated by the Provident Funds Act (f). It is an illegality when the Court dismissed an application to set aside a sale under O. 21, r. 89, merely because the names of all the purchasers had not been shewn in the application (g). It is also an illegality to include in a decree costs which are not legally taxable (h).

It is a 'material irregularity' if a decree is passed in a suit in the absence of a party in whose absence it could not possibly be made (i). It is also a material irregularity if a Court, taking a mistaken view of the question at issue proceeds to determine an issue which does not really arise in the case, and bases its decision of the case on a determination of that issue (j). It is also a material irregularity to treat the delivery of a summons by post to a person who was not shown to be the defendant as good service, and to pass a decree ex parte against the defendant on that footing (k), or to attach in execution of a personal decree against a defendant property which he holds as trustee for another (l), or to transfer a suit on application under sec. 24 without notice to the opposite party (m), or to make an order against a person without hearing him (n) or without giving the parties an opportunity of examining or cross examining an expert on whose report the Court has relied (o). It is also a material irregularity for a Court to decline to go into evidence when required to do so, and to proceed to dispose of the suit upon the pleadings or upon allegations made in a petition (p), or to refuse to draw up its own decree, whether it be preliminary or final (q), or to refuse to grant a certificate for a refund of Court fees of O 9, r 13 to direct a case to be reheard (A) In one case the Lahore High Court interfered in revision when the lower Court set aside an ex parte decree even though the application to set it aside was barred by limitation (s)

Order refusing review.—Where the lower Court refuses to entertain an application for review based on an allegation of fraud, the High Court has power to interfere under this section (j) The section, however, does not apply to an order refusing to grant a review (l) When the lower Court has rightly refused to restore an execution application under O 9 the High Court has no power under this section to direct it to treat the application as one in review (l)

Order granting review.—An order granting a review may be set aside in revision (m)

Award.—See notes to Schedule II, paras 1, 5 15 and 16, under the heading Revision

Lunacy.—As to the power of the High Court to interfere in lunacy proceedings, see the undermentioned case (n)

No revision from discretionary orders.—The High Court will not interfere in revision with an order which it is in the discretion of the lower Court to make (o) unless the order is not supported by any consideration of justice or by any provision of law (p) The lower appellate Court allowed a plaintiff to withdraw his suit and appeal without leave to bring a fresh suit on the same cause of action with the result that the defendant was deprived of the benefit of a judgment in his favour The case went to the Calcutta High Court in revision but the High Court while disapproving of the order, declined to interfere with the discretion of the Court (q)

Court fee.—An order demanding improper Court fee, if unfavourable to the plaintiff, is equivalent to telling the plaintiff that the Court will not proceed with the trial although the plaintiff has in fact paid the proper Court fee It is therefore a refusal to exercise jurisdiction and the High Court will interfere in revision (r) But if such an order is favourable to the plaintiff though it may cause detriment to the revenue does not prejudice the defendant and is no ground for revision (s) The Calcutta High Court has held that an order that the plaintiff's valuation is correct is not open to revision (t) But if plaintiff's valuation is too low it can be revised, otherwise, says the Patna High Court, the plaintiff would be able to drag the defendant into any Court he pleased (u)

shall lie to the High Court from the judgment of one Judge of the High Court or one Judge of any Division Court pursuant to sec 13 of the Charter Act. Now sec 13 of the Charter Act provides for the exercise by the Judges of the High Court of the original and appellate jurisdiction vested in the High Court. This gave rise to the question whether the division of jurisdiction into (1) original and (2) appellate was exhaustive or not. If the division was exhaustive, revisional jurisdiction must be treated as comprised in appellate jurisdiction, so that an appeal would lie under cl 15 from the judgment of a single Judge exercising revisional jurisdiction. If the division was not exhaustive so that revisional jurisdiction was something outside the original and appellate jurisdiction, the case would not fall within sec 13 of the Charter Act, and no appeal could therefore lie under cl 15 of the Letters Patent. It was held by the High Courts of Madras (b), and Calcutta (c) that the division of the jurisdiction of High Courts into original and appellate was exhaustive and that revisional jurisdiction was included in appellate jurisdiction, and that an appeal therefore lay under cl 15 of the Letters Patent from an order of a single Judge made under the present section, provided such order amounted to a 'judgment' within the meaning of that clause. The contrary was held by the High Court of Bombay (d), it does not, however, appear that there was any 'judgment' in the Bombay case (e).

Laches—An application for revision will not be entertained unless it is made without unreasonable delay (f).

The words and figures of the Government of India Act 1915 were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 17 of 1916

117. [S 632] Save as provided in this Part or in Part X or in rules, the provisions of this Code shall apply to such High Courts

Application of Code to High Courts

Save as provided in this Part—See s 120

Save as provided in Part X—See s 120

Rules — Rules means rules contained in the First Schedule or made under s 122 or s 125 see s 2 (18) see also O 41, r 7

118. [S 634] Where any such High Court considers it necessary that a decree passed in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction should be executed before the amount of the costs incurred in the suit can be ascertained by taxation, the Court may order that the decree shall be executed forthwith except as to so much thereof as relates to the costs,

Execution of decree be

and as to so much thereof as relates to the costs, that the decree may be executed as soon as the amount of the costs shall be ascertained by taxation

119. [S 635] Nothing in this Code shall be deemed to authorize any person on behalf of another to address the Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction or to examine witnesses, except where the Court shall have in the exercise of the power conferred by its charter authorized him so to do, or to interfere with the power of the High Court to make rules concerning advocates vakils and attorneys

Unauthorized persons not to address Court

See Letters Patent cls 9 and 10

120. [Ss. 638, 639.] The following provisions shall not apply to the High Court in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction, namely, sections 16, 17 and 20.

Provisions not applicable to High Court in original civil or insolvent jurisdiction.

As to Rules not applicable to Chartered High Courts, see O 49, r 3

Sub section (2) of this section by which it was provided that "nothing in this Code shall extend or apply to any Judge of a High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as an insolvent Court" has been repealed by the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909, s 127

PART X.

Rules.

121. [New] The rules in the First Schedule shall have effect as if enacted in the body of this Code until annulled or altered in accordance with the provisions of this Part

Effect of rules in First Schedule

The whole of this Part is new except ss 120, 130 and 131, which correspond to s 65^a paras 2, 3 and 4 of the Code of 1882

As to annulment and alterations of rules see s 124

122. [New Cf S 652, first para.] High Courts established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, and the Chief Court of Oudh, may, from time to time after previous publication, make rules regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence, and may by such rules annul, alter or add to all or any of the rules in the First Schedule

Power of certain High Courts to make rules

The words and figures or the Government of India Act 1915 were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words and the Chief Court of Oudh were added by the Oudh Courts Act 4 of 1920.

Rules made under this section by the various High Courts are set out in Appendices at the end of this work

Sections 120 to 128 excepting s 120 provide for rules to be made by Chartered High Courts for regulating their own procedure and the procedure of the Civil Courts subject to their superintendence—that is Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction—see High Courts Act 1861 s 15 and the Government of India Act 1915 s 107. These rules must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code (see s 128). Further they are subject to the previous approval of the authorities mentioned in s 126. Sec 129 provides for rules to be made by Chartered High Courts as to their original civil procedure. These rules may be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of the Code but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing those Courts.

Rules in the First Schedule—Rules made under s 122 may alter and annul the rules in the First Schedule. The Allahabad High Court has framed rules to be added to the rules in O 21 see Appendix V. Rule 1 of these rules is inconsistent with the First Schedule rule 43 of Order 21 which by inadvertence was not altered. It was held however that the effect was to alter rule 43 by implication (g).

Rules and limitation—None of the Courts empowered under this section to frame rules has power by any rule which it may make to alter the period of limitation prescribed by the Indian Limitation Act (h)

An appellant is entitled as of right under sec 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, to exclude the time requisite for obtaining copies of the decree or order appealed from and of the judgment on which such decree may be or is founded. This right is not affected by any rules made by any High Court that such copies need not accompany the memorandum of appeal (i)

123. [New] (1) A Committee, to be called the Rule Committee, shall be constituted at the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts and the Chief Court referred to in section 122

Constitution of Rule Committees in certain Provinces

(2) Each such Committee shall consist of the following persons, namely —

- (a) three Judges of the High Court established at the town at which such Committee is constituted, one of whom at least has served as a District Judge or a Divisional Judge for three years,
- (b) a barrister practising in that Court,
- (c) an advocate (not being a barrister) or vakil or pleader enrolled in that Court,
- (d) a Judge of a Civil Court subordinate to the High Court, and
- (e) in the towns of Calcutta, Madras and Bombay, an attorney

(3) The members of each such Committee shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge, who shall also nominate one of their number to be president

Provided that, if the Chief Justice or Chief Judge elects to be himself a member of a Committee, the number of other Judges appointed to be members shall be two, and the Chief Justice or Chief Judge shall be the President of the Committee

(4) Each member of any such Committee shall hold office for such period as may be prescribed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge in this behalf, and whenever any member retires, resigns, dies or ceases to reside in the province in which the Committee was constituted, or becomes incapable of acting as a member of the Committee, the said Chief Justice or Chief Judge may appoint another person to be a member in his stead

(5) There shall be a Secretary to each such Committee, who shall be appointed by the Chief Justice or Chief Judge and shall receive such remuneration as may be provided in this behalf by the Governor-General in Council or by the Local Government, as the case may be.

The words "the town which is the usual place of sitting of each of the High Courts referred to in section 122, in sub sec (1) were substituted for the words, "each of the towns of Calcutta Madras, Bombay, Allahabad, Lahore and Rangoon," by the Amending Act 13 of 1916 The words, "and the Chief Court," after the words "High Courts, were added by the Oudh Courts Act 4 of 1925

124. [New] Every Rule Committee shall make a report to the High Court established at the town at which it is constituted on any proposal to annul, alter or add to the rules in the First Schedule or to make new rules, and before making any rules under section 122 the High Court shall take such report into consideration

Committee to report to High Court

The provisions as to Rule Committees apply to rules to be made under sec 122 Rules under that section can only be made after the Chartered High Courts have taken the opinion of the Rule Committee attached to them

125. [New] High Courts, other than the Courts specified in section 122, may exercise the powers conferred by that section in such manner and subject to such conditions as, in the case of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, the Governor General in Council, and, in other cases, the Local Government, may determine

Power of other High Courts to make rules

Provided that any such High Court may, after publication, make a rule extending within the limits of its jurisdiction any rules which have been made by the High Court

Rules under this section should not be inconsistent with the provisions of this Code See sec 128 and contrast sec 129 As to exercise of power

126. [New] Rules made under the foregoing provisions shall be subject to the previous approval of the following authorities, namely —

Rules subject to sanction

(a) if the rule is made by a High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, to the approval of the authority prescribed by the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act for rules made under that section,

(b) if the rule is made by any other High Court, to the approval of the Local Government

The word approval in the section was substituted for the word sanction by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

The words and figures or the Government of India Act 1915 were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words and figures the proviso to section 107 of the latter Act were substituted for the words and figures section 15 of that Act also by that Act

Approval—This section requires in the case of rules to be made by Chartered High Courts the same sanction as is required by sec 107 of the Government of India Act 1915 the object being that the rule making power should correspond with the power conferred under section 107 of that Act. That section empowers the Chartered High Courts to make and issue general rules for regulating the practice and proceedings of Courts subject to their appellate jurisdiction subject to the previous approval in the case of the High Court of Calcutta of the Governor General in Council and in other cases of the local Government

127. [New] Rules so made and approved shall be published in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the same force and effect, within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the High Court which made them, as if they had been contained in the First Schedule

Publication of rules

The word approved was substituted for the word sanctioned by the Repealing and Amending Act 24 of 1917 sch. I

128. [New] (1) Such rules shall be not inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code, but, subject thereto, may provide for any matters relating to the procedure of Civil Courts

Matters for which rules may provide

(2) In particular, and without prejudice to the generality of the powers conferred by sub-section (1), such rules may provide for all or any of the following matters, namely.—

- (a) the service of summonses, notices and other process by post or in any other manner either generally or in any specified areas and the proof of such service,
- (b) the maintenance and custody, while under attachment, of live-stock and other movable property, the fees payable for such maintenance and custody, the sale of such live-stock and property and the proceeds of such sale;
- (c) procedure in suits by way of counter-claim, and the valuation of such suits for the purposes of jurisdiction (j);
- (d) procedure in garnishee and charging orders either in addition to, or in substitution for, the attachment and sale of debts;
- (e) procedure where the defendant claims to be entitled to contribution or indemnity over against any person whether a party to the suit or not (k),
- (f) summary procedure—
 - (i) in suits in which the plaintiff seeks only to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the defendant, with or without interest, arising—
 - on a contract express or implied, or
 - on an enactment where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt other than a penalty, or
 - on a guarantee, where the claim against the principal is in respect of a debt or a liquidated demand only, or
 - on a trust, or

- (ii) in suits for the recovery of immovable property, with or without a claim for rent or mesne profits, by a landlord against a tenant whose term has expired or has been duly determined by notice to quit, or has become liable to forfeiture for non-payment of rent, or against persons claiming under such tenant,
- (g) procedure by way of originating summons,
- (h) consolidation of suits, appeals and other proceedings,
- (i) delegation to any Registrar, Prothonotary or Master or other official of the Court of any judicial, quasi-judicial and non-judicial duties, and
- (j) all forms, registers, books, entries and accounts which may be necessary or desirable for the transaction of the business of Civil Courts

129. [S 52, third para] Notwithstanding anything in this Code, any High Court established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, may make such rules not inconsistent with the Letters

Power of Chartered High Courts to make rules as to their original civil procedure

Patent establishing it to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction as it shall think fit, and nothing herein contained shall affect the validity of any such rules in force at the commencement of this Code

The words and figures or the Government of India Act 1915 were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916

Rules as to original civil procedure of Chartered High Courts—Rules made under s 122 must not be inconsistent with the provisions in the body of this Code Under this section any Chartered High Court may make rules to regulate its own procedure in the exercise of its original civil jurisdiction Such rules may not be consistent with the provisions in the body of the Code but they must not be inconsistent with the Letters Patent establishing it The Letters Patent here referred to are the Letters Patent of 1865 those being the Letters Patent in force when the present Code was enacted and not the Letters Patent of 1860 (i)

Where a rule has been made by a High Court under this section the provisions of the Code do not apply Thus the rules of the Calcutta High Court contain provisions for default of payment by an auction purchaser at a sale under a mortgage decree on the originals de of the High Court and therefore O 21 r 86, does not apply to such sales (ii) But as the Calcutta rules contain no provision for setting aside a sale on deposit the provisions of O 21 r 89 do apply (n)

130. [S 652, ~~second para~~] A High Court not established under the Indian High Courts Act, 1861, or the Government of India Act, 1915, may, with the previous approval of the Local Government, make, with respect to any matter other than procedure, any rule which any High Court so established might, under section 15 or section 107 respectively of those Acts, make with respect to any such matter for any part of the territories under its jurisdiction which is not included within the limits of a Presidency-town

Power of the High Courts to make rules as to matters other than procedure

The words and figures 'or the Government of India Act, 1915' were inserted in the section by the Amending Act 13 of 1916. The words 'or section 107 respectively of those Acts' were substituted for the words 'of that Act' also by that Act.

The word 'approval' was substituted for the word "sanction" by the repealing and Amending Act 24 of 1917, Sch. I.

131. [S 652, ~~fourth para~~] Rules made in accordance with section 129 or section 130 shall be published in the Gazette of India or in the local official Gazette, as the case may be, and shall from the date of publication or from such other date as may be specified have the force of law

Miscellaneous.

132. [S 640] (1) Women who, according to the customs and manners of the country, ought not to be compelled to appear in public, shall be exempt from personal appearance in Court

Exemption of certain women from personal appearance

(2) Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to exempt such women from arrest in execution of civil process in any case in which the arrest of women is not prohibited by this Code

Appearance in Court—This section provides for exemption of purdanasheen ladies from personal appearance in Court but not from attendance in Court. The word appearance means that a purdanasheen lady shall not be compelled to come forth into view or to become visible to the public gaze. The Court therefore has power to order a purdanasheen lady to give evidence in Court provided she is not compelled to come forth into view or to become visible to the public gaze (p). See notes to O 26 r 1. Persons exempted from attending Court

On the other hand the Allahabad High Court has held that the words personal appearance mean personal attendance and that a purdanasheen lady cannot be compelled to attend Court either as a party or as a witness (p1)

133. [S 641] (1) The Local Government may, by notification in the local official Gazette, exempt from personal appearance in Court any person whose rank in the opinion of such Government, entitles him to the privilege of exemption

Exemption of other persons

(2) The names and residences of the persons, so exempted shall, from time to time, be forwarded to the High Court by the Local Government and a list of such persons as reside within the local limits of the jurisdiction of each Court subordinate to the High Court shall be kept in such subordinate Court

(3) Where any person so exempted claims the privilege of such exemption, and it is consequently necessary to examine him by commission, he shall pay the costs of that commission, unless the party requiring his evidence pays such costs

134. [New] The provisions of sections 55, 57 and 59 shall apply, so far as may be, to all persons arrested under this Code

Arrest other than in execution of decree

This section is new It applies an omission

135. [S 642] (1) No Judge, Magistrate or other judicial officer shall be liable to arrest under civil process while going to, presiding in, or returning from, his Court

Exemption from arrest under civil process

(2) Where any matter is pending before a tribunal having jurisdiction therein, or believing in good faith that it has such jurisdiction, the parties thereto, their pleaders, mukhtars, revenue agents, and recognized agents, and their witnesses acting in obedience to a summons, shall be exempt from arrest under civil process other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court while going to or attending such tribunal for the purpose of such matter, and while returning from such tribunal

(3) Nothing in sub section (2) shall enable a judgment debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order for immediate execution or where such judgment debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree

1 The words other than process issued by such tribunal for contempt of Court in sub s (2) have been added to give effect to a Calcutta decision (q)

2 Sub section (3) is new It has been substituted for the words except as provided in section 337A sub section (5) and sections 256 and 643 which occurred at the commencement of sub section (2) in the Code of 1882

Grounds of exemption from arrest—The exemption here conferred is not for the personal benefit of the individual but for the furthering of public interests and the better administration of justice In other words the exemption is not the privilege of the person attending the Court but that of the Court which he attends If therefore, a witness does not believe bona fide that his attendance was required there is no privilege (r) For the same reason where a writ of attachment for contempt of Court has been issued against a party to a suit he cannot claim privilege from arrest while proceeding to Court for the purpose of attending the hearing of the suit (s)

While going to or attending and while returning from Court—A party to a suit is exempt from arrest under this section while going to or attending the Court before which the suit is pending and while returning from such Court The word while implies that there is a period of exemption and what period is reasonable is a question of fact to be determined by the Court in each case (t) The following are the leading cases bearing on this part of the section —

(1) Where a plaintiff who was a native of Patna and who had instituted a suit in the High Court of Madras left Patna on receiving a letter from his solicitors that his presence was required and arrived at Madras on 24th October, and the suit having come on for hearing on the 27th of October was adjourned till the 25th of December and he was arrested in execution of a decree against him on the 10th of November it was held by the High Court of Madras that he was privileged from arrest (u) This decision was disapproved by the Allahabad High Court (v) in the case cited in ill (2) below, but it is in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords in the under mentioned case (w)

(2) A, residing in Bombay, goes to Benares to prosecute an application to set aside an ex parte decree passed against him by the Benares Court, and puts up at a Dak bungalow in Benares On the date fixed for the hearing of the application A attends the Court when his application is heard and dismissed He then leaves the Court returns to the Dak bungalow, and thence proceeds to the railway station where he is arrested in execution of the decree while actually seated in the train It is found on evidence that A had taken a ticket for Allahabad when arrested On the above facts the High Court of Allahabad held that A's arrest was legal The Court said In the present case [A] had left the Court and had returned to the place where [he] was staying in Benares, he had then left that place and [was] actually on his way to Allahabad which is not his home In these circumstances we cannot hold that he at the time of arrest, was returning from a tribunal within the meaning of section 135 (c)

(3) The exemption from arrest continues during such period as is reasonably occupied in going to attending at, and returning from the place of trial (y) But if there is a deviation, the privilege is forfeited A party to a suit was arrested at an office in the same compound as the Court house an hour after the Court had risen for the day and as it was not shewn that he was returning to his residence the arrest was held to be legal (z) But it is not a deviation sufficient to forfeit the privilege if the shortest road home is deviated from and a less crowded and more convenient road adopted (a)

(4) A debtor who is released from jail under an order of the Court on the ground that the order under which he was committed was illegal may be arrested under civil process immediately after he is released He is not privileged from arrest as returning from Court It does not follow because imprisonment followed on an order which was illegal that he should be treated when released from jail as returning from Court (b)

(5) A is arrested in execution of a decree obtained against him by B and is brought before the Court While he is in the custody of the Court's officers he is arrested in execution of a decree obtained against him by C A is not exempt from arrest in execution of C's decree It cannot be said that A, while he was under arrest in execution of B's decree, was voluntarily in Court in connection with the execution of B's decree (c)

"Parties"—A defendant in a summary suit under O 37 [Code of 1882, chapter 34] is privileged from arrest though he has not obtained leave to defend the suit (d). An accused ordered to attend a criminal Court is entitled to the protection of this section (e).

Civil process—This section applies only to witnesses and parties arrested under writs issued by Courts to which the Code applies. It does not apply where a party is arrested under a writ issued from a Small Cause Court. As there is no provision in the Small Cause Court Act corresponding to this section questions as to exemption from arrest in the case of persons arrested under writs issued by Small Cause Courts must be governed by the principles of the English law on the subject. They are very much the same as those set forth in the present section (f).

Appeal—Where a judgment debtor arrested in execution of a decree claims exemption from arrest under this section, but the exemption is not allowed, the order is one under sec. 47, and is appealable (g).

Exemption of members of legislative bodies from arrest and detention under civil process

135A. (1) No person shall be liable to arrest or detention in prison under civil process—

- (a) if he is a member of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature or of a Legislative Council constituted under the Government of India Act, during the continuance of any meeting of such Chamber or Council,
- (b) if he is a member of any committee of such Chamber or Council, during the continuance of any meeting of such committee,
- (c) if he is a member of either Chamber of the Indian Legislature, during the continuance of a joint sitting of the Chambers, or of a meeting of a conference or joint committee of the Chambers of which he is a member, and during the fourteen days before and after such meeting or sitting

(2) A person released from detention under sub section (1) shall, subject to the provisions of the said sub section, be liable to re arrest and to the further detention to which he would have been liable if he had not been released under the provisions of sub section (1)

136. [S 648] (1) Where an application is made that any person shall be arrested or that any property shall be attached under any provision of this Code not relating to the execution of decrees, and such person resides

Procedure where person to be arrested or property to be attached is outside district or such property is situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to which the application is made, the Court may, in its discretion, issue a warrant of arrest or make an order of attachment, and send to the District Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction such person or property resides or is situate a copy of the warrant or order, together with the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment

(2) The District Court, shall, on receipt of such copy and amount, cause the arrest or attachment to be made by its own officers, or by a Court subordinate to itself, and shall inform the Court which issued or made such warrant or order of the arrest or attachment

(3) The Court making an arrest under this section shall send the person arrested to the Court by which the warrant of arrest was issued, unless he shows cause to the satisfaction of the former Court why he should not be sent to the latter Court, or unless he furnishes sufficient security for his appearance before the latter Court or for satisfying any decree that may be passed against him by that Court, in either of which cases the Court making the arrest shall release him

(4) Where a person to be arrested or movable property to be attached under this section is within the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal or at Madras or at Bombay, or of the Chief Court of Lower Burma, the copy of the warrant of arrest or of the order of attachment, and the probable amount of the costs of the arrest or attachment, shall be sent to the Court of Small Causes of Calcutta, Madras, Bombay or Rangoon, as the case may be, and that Court, on receipt of the copy and amount, shall proceed as if it were the District Court

Arrest and attachment otherwise than in execution of decree—This section prescribes the procedure to be followed where a person is to be arrested or where property is to be attached otherwise than in execution of a decree. The Court may u 1 The procedure enacted in this section attach before judgment property outside the local limits of its jurisdiction and may also under O 21, r 28, read with O 38, r 8, order the removal of the attachment (A)

Order of arrest for contempt of Court.—It has been held in Calcutta that a Judge of the Calcutta High Court sitting on its original side has no power to direct a mofussil Court to execute a warrant of arrest for contempt of Court. But if he grants an injunction and the order is disobeyed he may direct the arrest and detention of the offender under O 39 r 2 in which case the present section will apply (i)

The Madras High Court has held that when an injunction issued by a Division Bench of the High Court on the Appellate Side is disobeyed by a party residing in the mofussil the Bench has the power to send to the appropriate mofussil Court the warrant of arrest for execution whether this section applies in terms or not, and the mofussil Court on receipt of the warrant must proceed as provided in this section (j). In the Madras case the Court treated the disobedience of the injunction as contempt of Court. It is difficult to understand why when an injunction had actually been granted the Court did not proceed under O 39 r 2, in which case there could have been no doubt as to the applicability of the present section to the case.

137. [S 645] (1) The language which, on the commencement of this Code, is the language of any Court subordinate to a High Court shall continue to be the language of such subordinate Court until the Local Government otherwise directs

Language of subordinate Courts

(2) The Local Government may declare what shall be the language of any such Court and in what character applications to and proceedings in such Courts shall be written

(3) Where this Code requires or allows anything other than the recording of evidence to be done in writing in any such Court, such writing may be in English, but if any party or his pleader is unacquainted with English a translation into the language of the Court shall, at his request, be supplied to him, and the Court shall make such order as it thinks fit in respect of the payment of the costs of such translation

141. [S 647] The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction

This section does not apply to proceedings in execution—Sec 647 of the Code of 1882 as it stood when that Code was first enacted ran as follows—

The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals

The question arose under that section whether the words proceedings other than suits and appeals included proceedings in execution in other words whether that section had the effect of rendering the provisions of the Code relating to suits applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree On the one hand the High Courts of Allahabad (1) and Bombay (2) held that that section applied to applications for execution

(1) Asfayat Ali v Ram Singh (1885) 7 All 353; Surja Prasad v Suda Jan (1888) 10 All 71; Fakirullah v Thakur Prasad (1890) 12 All 179; Padma Charan v Man Singh (1890) 12 All 390

of decrees, so that the procedure relating to suits was applicable to applications for execution. On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta held that that section did not apply to proceedings in execution (m). In this state of authorities the Legislature intervened, and an Explanation was added to the section by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act 6 of 1892, which ran as follows —

The effect of the above Explanation was to supersede, the Allahabad and Bombay rulings above referred to, and to give legislative sanction to the Calcutta decision.

In the meantime one of the Allahabad cases referred to above, namely, the case of Fakir ullah v. Thakur Prasad (n), was taken up to the Privy Council, and that tribunal held, in the year 1894, that independently of the Explanation, sec. 647 did not apply to applications for execution, but only to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in probates, guardianships, and so forth, thus overruling the Allahabad and Bombay cases (o). This decision, if it had come three years earlier, would have rendered the Explanation unnecessary. The Privy Council decision and the recognition of the rule that sec. 647 does not apply to execution proceedings render the explanation unnecessary, and it has accordingly been omitted in the present section (p). At the same time two alterations have been made in the section, namely, (1) the words “in regard to suits” have been added, and (2) the words “other than suits and appeals” have been omitted. In so doing the Legislature has now done what it could have done as well in 1892.

The reason why the words “other than suits and appeals” which occurred at the end of sec. 647 have been omitted in the present section is this. Sec. 647 applied to proceedings “other than suits and appeals.” The High Court of Allahabad held that applications for the execution of decrees were proceedings “other than suits and appeals” and that sec. 647 applied therefore to such applications (q). On the other hand, the High Court of Calcutta held that applications for the execution of decrees were not proceedings “other than suits and appeals,” they being proceedings in suits, and that sec. 647 did not therefore apply to such applications (r). The Legislature adopted the view of the Calcutta High Court, and enacted by way of Explanation to the section that the “section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits.” It would have been a shorter cut if the Legislature had amended sec. 647 by deleting the words “other than suits and appeals,” as those were the words that gave rise to the conflict, instead of adding into the section an Explanation which certainly was not happily worded. What the Legislature omitted to do in 1892 it did in 1908.

This section, we have said, does not apply to proceedings in execution (s). Hence the procedure provided in the Code in regard to suits does not apply to applications for execution of decrees. The following are the leading decisions on the subject —

1. The provisions of sec. 11 relating to res judicata in regard to suits do not apply to applications for the execution of decrees. But though these provisions do not in

141. [S 647] The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction.

This section does not apply to proceedings in execution—See 647 of the Code of 1882 as it stood when that Code was first enacted ran as follows—

The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals

The question arose under that sect on whether the words proceedings other than suits and appeals included proceedings in execution in other words whether that section had the effect of rendering the provisions of the Code relating to suits applicable to proceedings in execution of a decree On the one hand the High Courts of Allahabad (k) and Bombay (l) held that that section applied to applications for execution of decrees so that the procedure relating to suits was applicable to applications for execution. On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta held that that section did not apply to proceedings in execution (m). In this state of authorities the Legislature intervened, and an Explanation was added to the section by the Civil Procedure Code Amendment Act of 1892 which ran as follows —

Explanation—This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees which are proceedings in suits.

The effect of the above Explanation was to supersede the Allahabad and Bombay rulings above referred to and to give legislative sanction to the Calcutta decision.

In the meantime one of the Allahabad cases referred to above namely the case of Fakirullah v. Thakur Jemad (n) was taken up to the Privy Council and that tribunal held in the year 1894 that independently of the Explanation sec 647 did not apply to applications for execution but only to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth thus overruling the Allahabad and Bombay cases (). This decision if it had come three years earlier would have rendered the Explanation unnecessary. The Privy Council decision and the recognition of the rule that sec 647 does not apply to execution proceedings render the explanation unnecessary and it has accordingly been omitted in the present section (p). At the same time two alterations have been made in the section namely (1) the words "in regard to suits" have been added and (2) the words "other than suits and appeals" have been omitted. In so doing the Legislature has now done what it could have done as well in 1892.

The reason why the words "other than suits and appeals" which occurred at the end of sec 647 have been omitted in the present section is this. Sec 647 applied to proceedings other than suits and appeals. The High Court of Allahabad held that applications for the execution of decrees were proceedings other than suits and appeals and that sec 647 applied therefore to such applications (q). On the other hand the High Court of Calcutta held that applications for the execution of decrees were not proceedings other than suits and appeals they being proceedings in suits and that sec 647 did not therefore apply to such applications (r). terms apply to applications for execution, they are governed by principles analogous to those of res judicata. See note to sec 11, "Orders in execution proceedings," on p 87 above

2 The provisions of O 2, r 2 [Code of 1882, s 43] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence where a decree awards two distinct reliefs, an application to enforce one relief is no bar to a subsequent application to enforce the other relief, though both reliefs are awarded by the same decree (t)

3 The provisions of O 9 [Code of 1882, ss 96 to 109] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence if the applicant fails to appear at the hearing of the application, the Court cannot dismiss the application under O 9, r 8 [Code of 1882, s 102] though it may do so under its inherent power (u). And where in the exercise of this power an application for execution is dismissed, the Court has no power to restore it to the file under O 9 r 9 [Code of 1882, s 103] (v) as that rule does not apply to execution proceedings. But though the Court has no power to restore to the file an application which has once been dismissed for default such dismissal is no bar to a fresh application for execution (w). See notes to O 9, r 9, and O 9, r 13, 'Execution proceedings'

4 The provisions of O 17, rr 23 [Code of 1882, ss 157 158] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence an order dismissing an application for default is no bar to a fresh application for execution (x)

5 The provisions of O 23 r 1 [Code of 1882 s 373] do not apply to applications for execution. Hence the withdrawal of an application though it be without the leave of the Court, is no bar to a fresh application for execution (y). See now O 23, r 4

7 See O 22, r 12

Other cases under this section are considered in their proper place

"Proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction"—The proceedings spoken of in this section refer to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probate guardianship and so forth and do not include execution (z). An application under sec 18 of the Religious Endowments Act, 1863, is a proceeding of this nature. Hence it must be verified as required by O 6 r 15 of the Code (a). But an application for settlement of rents made to a Revenue Officer under sec 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is not a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction. Hence the petition need not be signed as required by O 6, r 14 (b). A petition by a company to the High Court under the Indian Companies Memorandum of Association Act 189, for the confirmation of a special resolution altering the Memorandum of Association of the Company, is a proceeding within the meaning of this section. Therefore where the petition was dismissed and the Company applied for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the case was dealt with by the Court under sec 59 of the Code of 1882, [now s. 109] (c). Similarly an application to set aside an ex parte payment-order made under the Indian Companies Act 6 of 1882 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction

Hence the provisions of O 9, r 13 apply to the case (d). An application under sec 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction. Hence a receiver may be appointed in such a proceeding under O 40, r 1 (c) and the receiver so appointed will have all the powers of a receiver under the Code (f). An application under O 9, r 13 is a proceeding referred to in this section and also sec 21 as to objects in the jurisdiction applies to such an application (g). But an application for a necessary certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, is not such a proceeding.

may be appointed under O 40, r 1, pending the application (i). Disciplinary proceedings taken under sec 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 are not proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of this section, therefore the procedure provided by sec 24 of the Code does not apply to those proceedings (j). An application under para 17 of Schedule II to file an agreement to refer to arbitration comes within this section hence where an application is made under that para, the applicant may join several causes of action in the application as provided by O 2, r 3 below (k). An inquiry before a Commissioner appointed by a Court to ascertain the amount of mesne profits payable by one party to another is a proceeding within the meaning of this section. Hence the provisions of O 18, r 1, apply to the proceeding (l). In a suit on a mortgage an application under O 34, r 5 (3) for a final decree (m) or under O 34, r 6 for a personal decree (n) is not a proceeding in execution but a proceeding contemplated by this section, and so the provisions of O 9 apply. See also notes to O 9, r 9, "Dismissal for default of application to restore suit."

"The procedure provided in this Code"—This section extends the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits to proceedings in Civil Courts. It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., a right of appeal (o). Hence no appeal lies from an order passed in a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section unless the order comes within the purview of O 43 (p). Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to the proper Court (q). Further the section does not confer upon any Court entertaining such proceedings a power not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., the power to refer questions to the High Court [s 113] (r).

Hence the provisions of O 9, r 13 apply to the case (d). An application under sec 12 of the Guardians and Wards Act, 1890 is a proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction. Hence a receiver may be appointed in such a proceeding under O 40, r 1 (e) and the receiver so appointed will have all the powers of a receiver under the Code (f). An application under O 9, r 13 is a proceeding referred to in this section and as sec 21 as to jurisdiction applies to such an application (g). But an application for a succession certificate under the Succession Certificate Act, 1889, is not such a proceeding. Hence a receiver cannot be appointed under O 40 in such a proceeding (h). An application for the appointment of a Common Manager under sec 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act 8 of 1885 is a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section, a receiver therefore may be appointed under O 40, r 1, pending the application (i). Disciplinary proceedings taken under sec 14 of the Legal Practitioners Act 18 of 1879 are not proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction within the meaning of this section, therefore the procedure provided by sec 24 of the Code does not apply to those proceedings (j). An application under para 17 of Schedule II to file an agreement to refer to arbitration comes within this section, hence where an application is made under that para, the applicant may join several causes of action in the application as provided by O 2, r 7, below (k). An inquiry before a Commissioner appointed by a Court to ascertain the amount of mesne profits payable by one party to another is a proceeding within the meaning of this section. Hence the provisions of O 18, r 1, apply to the proceeding (l). In a suit on a mortgage an application under O 34, r 5 (3) for a final decree (m), or under O 34, r 6 for a personal decree (n) is not a proceeding in execution, but a proceeding contemplated by this section, and so the provisions of O 9 apply. See also notes to O 9, r 9, "Dismissal for default of application to restore suit."

"The procedure provided in this Code"—This section extends the procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits to proceedings in Civil Courts. It does not confer any substantive right not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., a right of appeal (o). Hence no appeal lies from an order passed in a proceeding of the kind contemplated by this section unless the order comes within the purview of O 43 (p). Nor does an appeal lie from an order returning a memorandum of appeal to the proper Court (q). Further the section does not confer upon any Court entertaining such proceedings a power not expressly given elsewhere by the Code, e.g., the power to refer questions to the High Court [s 113] (r).

143. [S 95] Postage, where chargeable on a notice summons or letter issued under this Code and forwarded by post, and the fee for registering the same, shall be paid within a time to be fixed before the communication is made

Provided that the Local Government may remit such postage, or fee, or both, or may prescribe a scale of court fees to be levied in lieu thereof

144. [S 583] (1) Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed, and, for this purpose, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal

(2) No suit shall be instituted for the purpose of obtaining any restitution or other relief which could be obtained by application under sub section (1)

When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this chapter desires to obtain execution of the same he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred, and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits

The new section—Sub sec (1) of the present section is sec 583 so recast as to give legislative recognition to the practice founded on that section

Restitution—The word restitution in this section means restoring to a party on the variation or reversal of a decree what has been lost to him in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree The section does not apply unless the property was lost in execution of the decree or directly in consequence of that decree (s) The restitution moreover must be properly consequential on the variation or reversal of the decree (t) The granting of restitution however is not discretionary The principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of a decree in appeal the law imposes an obligation on the party to the suit who received the benefit of the erroneous decree to make restitution to the other party for what he has lost (u). The decree of reversal, necessarily carries with it the right to restitution of all that has been under the erroneous decree, and the Court in making restitution is bound to restore the parties so far as they can be restored to the same position they were in at the time when the Court by its erroneous action had displaced them from it (v).

The doctrine of restitution contemplates the case where property has been received by a decree holder in execution of a decree and the decree or part thereof is subsequently varied or reversed on appeal by the judgment debtor. In such a case, the procedure to be adopted by the judgment debtor is to apply under this section to the Court of first instance for restitution of the property and for consequential relief. On such application being made the Court shall cause restitution to be made to the judgment debtor (the successful appellant). The restitution to be made must be such as will so far as may be place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for the decree appealed from or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed (w). The ordinary case for restitution is where something has been taken from a party in execution of a decree which has been varied or reversed but the section is not confined within these precise limits for a person against whom a decree for possession has been made may very well give up possession without insisting that any process of execution should be taken against him. When a person gives up possession in consequence of a decree, which is afterwards varied or reversed he is entitled to restitution under this section (x). The principle applies with equal force whether restitution has or has not been directed in the appellate decree (y). For the purpose of making such restitution as aforesaid the Court may make any orders including orders for the refund of costs (z) and for the payment of interest (a), damages (b) compensation and mesne profits (c), which are property consequential on such variation or reversal. If the applicant has paid money into Court by way of security to obtain a stay of execution he will be entitled to interest as for the use of the money of which he has been deprived although the opposite party has not withdrawn the money (d). In directing restitution it is to be noted that the parties must be placed in the same position as they were previously in irrespective of any other rights accruing to any of them during the litigation (e). Where an order is made against a party for restitution but restitution is not made the order may be enforced by sale of his property [s. 36] (f).

(2) A obtains a decree against B for Rs 5,000, and recovers the amount in execution The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal B is entitled on an application under this section to a refund of the money together with interest up to the date of repayment, though the appellate decree may be silent as to interest see the cases cited in foot note (a) above In Rodger v Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (9), which is the leading case on the subject, Lord Cairns, in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, observed as follows "It is contended on the part of the respondents here [that is, A in the present illustration], that the principal sum being restored to the present petitioners [that is, B in the present illustration], they have no right to recover from them any interest It is obvious that, if that is so, injury, and very grave injury, will be done to the petitioners They will by reason of an act of the Court have paid a sum which it is now ascertained was ordered to be paid by mistake and wrongfully They will recover that sum after a lapse of a considerable time, but they will recover it without the ordinary fruits which are derived from the enjoyment of money On the other hand, those fruits will have been enjoyed, or may have been enjoyed, by the person who by mistake and by wrong obtained possession of the money under a judgment which has been reversed So far, therefore, as principle is concerned, their Lordships have no doubt or hesitation in saying that injustice will be done to the petitioners, and that the perfect judicial determination, which it must be the object of all Courts to arrive at, will not have been arrived at unless the persons who have had their money improperly taken from them have the money restored to them, with interest, during the time that the money has been withheld' These observations apply equally to mesne profits which form the subject of the next illustration

(3) A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property and in execution of the decree obtains possession of the property The decree is subsequently reversed in appeal B is entitled to possession of the property together with mesne profits during the period of dispossession see the cases cited in foot note (c) on the preceding page If the property has in the meantime been let out by A to tenants, B is entitled to remove any tenant who refuses to vacate Rohni Singh v Hodding (1894) 21 Cal 340

Splitting of claim for restitution—It has been held by the High Courts of Patna and Madras that the provisions of O 2, r 2, do not apply to a proceeding under this section A obtains a decree against B for possession of certain immovable property, and recovers possession of the property pursuant to the decree B appeals from the decree, and the decree is reversed in appeal B then applies for restitution of the property, and the property is restored to him Subsequently B applies for mesne profits for the period during which A was in possession of the property Is B debarred from claiming mesne profits on the ground that he ought to have included the claim for mesne profits in the application for restitution of the property? No (h) Similarly a judgment debtor who applies for and obtains restitution of a sum of money on reversal by the appellate Court of the decree pursuant to which he had paid the sum to the decree holder is not precluded from making a fresh application for recovery of interest for the period during which the decree holder had the use of the money (i)

Inherent power to grant restitution—The power of a Court to grant restitution is not confined to the cases covered by the provisions of this section. It extends also to cases which do not come strictly within this section. The reason is that a Court has an inherent power under sec. 151 irrespective of this section to order restitution (j)

In Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council said: "It is the duty of the Court under sec. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code to place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed. Nor indeed does this duty or jurisdiction arise merely under the said section. It is inherent in the general jurisdiction of the Court to act rightly and fairly according to the circumstances towards all parties involved. As was said by Cairns L.C. in Rodger v. Comptoir d'Escompte de Paris (2) 'One of the first and highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors and when the expression, the act of the Court, is used it does not mean merely the act of the primary Court, or of any intermediate Court of appeal but the act of the Court as a whole from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case'. In Jai Berham's case a sale in execution of a decree was set aside on the ground that the sale certificate comprised property different from that which was attached. The property was applied for by the judgment debtor and the decree holder was entitled to the property. This was applied for by the judgment debtor and the decree holder was entitled to the property." (1) Jai Berham v. Kedar Nath Marwari (1914) 40 I.L.R. 101 (P.C.). (2) (1871) L.R. 3 P.C. 465, 475.

the application under the inherent power conferred upon it by sec. 151. Accordingly when a sale was set aside on an application under O. 21, r. 90 the judgment debtor was awarded mesne profits under sec. 151 from the decree holder purchaser for the period he
